ABSTRACT

With the goal of enhancing cooperation and interaction among youth, youth organizations, and other service providers to the youth sector, this directory aims to give youth, as well as people and organizations involved and interested in youth-related issues, a comprehensive source of information on South African youth organizations and related relevant issues. The directory is divided into three main parts. The first part, which is the background, is introductory comments by President Nelson Mandela and other officials. The second part consists of three directory sections, namely South African youth and children's organizations, South African educational institutions, including technical training colleges, technikons and universities, and South African and international youth organizations. The section on South African youth and children's organizations, the largest section, consists of 44 sectoral chapters, with each organization listed in a sectoral chapter representing its primary activity focus. Each organization is at the same time also cross-referenced with other relevant sectoral chapters, indicated by keywords at the bottom of an entry. An overall sectoral index, combining the various cross references, ensures easy access to the information in this section. The third part consists of sections of resource material focusing on youth and children's issues, including publications, electronic information resources, and international and Southern African charters and conventions. A special chapter on the activities of organizations that have contributed financially to the publication has been included. The final section is an alphabetical index of all the information in the directory. (BT)

The Youth Book

A DIRECTORY OF SOUTH AFRICAN YOUTH ORGANISATIONS, SERVICE PROVIDERS AND RESOURCE MATERIAL

PREFACE

Over one and a half billion people are between the ages of 10 and 24, representing almost 30 percent of the world's total population. By the year 2025, their numbers are projected to reach nearly 2 billion. In South Africa it is estimated that there is approximately 11 million South Africans in the 16 to 30 year age group and population projections estimate that by the year 2000 over 50 percent of the population will be under 21 years of age.

In view of the vast development challenges confronting and impacting on South African youth, and in an effort to contribute to the youth development process in South Africa, the Youth Section of the Chief Directorate: Population Development of the Department of Welfare has requested the Programme for Development Research (PRODDER) at the Human Sciences Research Council (HSRC) in September 1995 to compile The Youth Book: A Directory of South African Youth Organisations, Service Providers and Resource Material.

The objective of this research and publication project is to provide youth, as well as people and organisations involved and interested in youth-related issues, with a comprehensive source of information on South African youth organisations and related relevant issues. Children's organisations are also included in this definition.

It is hoped that this publication will enhance cooperation and interaction between youth, youth organisations and other service providers to the youth sector.

Given the extensive and comprehensive nature of this publication, recognition must be given to the contributions that all listed organisations have made in assisting PRODDER to compile this publication. In addition to responses from individual organisations, certain organisations also made information available to PRODDER which covered a number of organisations operating in various geographical regions or youth-related sectors.

I would also like to express my appreciation to the authors of the introductory comments, namely President Nelson Mandela, Founder and Chairperson of the Nelson Mandela Children's Fund (NMCF), Geraldine Fraser-Moleketi, Minister of Welfare and Population Development and Dr Jay Parsons, Representative of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) in South Africa. Their authoritative and respected comments enhance the contents and importance of this publication.

Special mention must also be made of the financial contributions of a number of organisations that have made this publication possible, including the Department of Welfare and the Human Sciences Research Council for funding the research process, and the Nelson Mandela Children's Fund (NMCF), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO), the DG Murray Trust and the Dutch Embassy for funding the printing and distribution of the publication.

I would also like to thank Ana-Maria Valente and Ornella Trinco of Dictum Publishers, as well as all their staff members, for their support and encouragement in finalising and preparing this publication, including the assistance of Craig and Michelle McMurray of MGP with regard to the layout and reproduction work and Bertie Groenewald of Creda Press for printing the publication.

Lastly and most importantly, a special word of appreciation to the PRODDER staff for their dedication in compiling this publication, especially Adelaine Botha for typing the manuscript and the support of Jackie Field and Nthoto Seemahale in this regard, as well as Yzette Ferreira for her assistance during the final stages of the research process and the preparation of the publication.

Given the importance of the youth development process to the future of South Africa, it is PRODDER's sincere wish that this publication will make an important information contribution in assisting and supporting youth in addressing their individual and collective challenges.

Nelson Mandela
CHILDREN'S FUND

Message from the Founder and Chairperson

President Nelson R. Mandela

I welcome the publication of the "Youth Book" as it provides a key to unlocking the power of networking effectively between individual youth organisations themselves, and between youth organisations, service providers and people from all walks of life who wish to contribute towards creating a brighter tomorrow for our young people.

The key of course is information, without which there can be no effective networking - and networking is essential to achieving success in building a new and vibrant South Africa.

I am also delighted that once again our Children's Fund has joined hands with government organisations and the private sector to help strengthen initiatives enabling youth to fulfill their potential and their promise. For our young people are our nation's future.

Congratulations to all involved in this initiative.

GERALDINE FRASER-MOLEKETI

MINISTER OF WELFARE AND POPULATION DEVELOPMENT

The young people of a nation are one of its greatest assets. As society and as a national government we have a responsibility to invest in our youth in order to maximise the potential of South Africa's youth. Such investment is critical since our youth have an important role to play in shaping the future of our country.

Our young people have played a significant role in moving our country towards democracy. This has not been without a cost, the cost of losing their childhood and youth.

However, youth in the process of striving for democracy have played a role in various spheres and in instances contributing towards changing the welfare and quality of life for disadvantaged South Africans.

The Youth Book: A Directory of South African Youth Organisations, Service Providers and Resource Material recognises the role and special contribution of youth organisations through their activities in communities.

This publication comes at an appropriate moment - it is launched in the twenty-first anniversary year of the Soweto uprisings and after the launch of the National Youth Commission which endorses the commitment of our society and government to our youth. It will attempt to network our youth in the struggle to reconstruct our society. Let us read in the pages of the directory about the energy, enthusiasm, courage, idealism, constructiveness and dedication of young people.

We must ensure that society does not only provide moral support to our young people. We must support our youth practically and materially as well!

My sincerest appreciation for this research undertaking goes to David Barnard of the Programme for Development Research (PRODDER) at the Human Sciences Research Council (HSRC) and his team of researchers. A special appreciation for the financial assistance provided by the Nelson Mandela Children's Fund (NMCF), the D G Murray Trust, the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and the Dutch Embassy.

All these sponsors are gratefully acknowledged. I furthermore want to acknowledge the Youth Section of the Chief Directorate Population Development (DCPD) in the Department of Welfare which spearheaded this project.

To everyone who believes in a brighter future for South Africa, the youth of South Africa extends an invitation of support for their development ventures. Let us support our future!

DR JAY PARSONS

REPRESENTATIVE - UNITED NATIONS POPULATION FUND (UNFPA)

South Africa has recently emerged from years of struggle against apartheid. Since the student uprising of 1976, the youth of South Africa played a major role in opposing a system that undermined their potential and denied them access to quality educational opportunities, adequate and satisfying jobs and to quality basic human services.

Since the election of the new government in 1994, the youth in South Africa have yet another struggle to face, one to rebuild their communities and make South Africa a nation of compassion and support for its long neglected majority and a symbol of hope on a continent of despair.

The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) is committed to assisting youth, youth organisations and other NGOs active in the population field broadly defined - from reproductive and sexual health, population data collection and analysis to understanding the relationships between population factors and sustainable development.

We, at UNFPA, believe that it is crucial to involve the youth in all stages of development planning, implementation and monitoring. Recognising this need the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development calls upon all governments and donors to work collaboratively with NGOs in order to establish appropriate mechanisms to respond to the special needs of adolescents. We believe that this directory is a first step in the direction of achieving this goal.

The Youth Book: A Directory of South African Youth Organisations, Service Providers and Resource Material will allow youth organisations to interact and cooperate closely with fields of common interest. The directory will also ensure that government and donors will identify relevant youth NGOs with whom to cooperate on levels of mutual interest. UNFPA has already joined partners with several South African NGOs to reach out to youth.

We believe that this directory will be a valuable tool to further cooperate with youth NGOs and to assist in the new struggle that faces South Africa.

Youth and Development

THE CHALLENGE OF THE NEW GENERATION

DAVID BARNARD COORDINATOR
PROGRAMME FOR DEVELOPMENT RESEARCH (PRODDER)
HUMAN SCIENCES RESEARCH COUNCIL (HSRC)

"The youth of our country are the valued posessions of the nation. Without them there can be no future. Their needs are immense and urgent."

(Nelson Mandela, 1994)

Research commissioned by the Joint Enrichment Programme (JEP) and conducted by the Community Agency for Social Enquiry (CASE) revealed that there are approximately 11 million South Africans in the 16 to 30 year age group, 52% are unemployed, only one in five have studied as far as they wished to, almost three-quarters falsely believe themselves not at risk of contracting AIDS and one in ten have been victims of political violence.

In addition, the Co-operative Research Programme: South African Youth, which was managed by the Human Sciences Research Council (HSRC), reported that there is no doubt that a proportion of South African youth, as well as children and adults, have been so negatively affected by decades of being disadvantaged and disempowered that some are unable to play what would be regarded as a "normal" role in society. The effects of apartheid on youth are seen in the form of crime, substance abuse, disease, violence, homelessness and other forms of social pathology.

In view of this situation, it is clear that if young people are ignored and allowed to continue in their downward spiral towards self-destruction, the whole fabric of South African society will be at risk. It is because of this situation, which relates very closely to the neglect of South African youth by the previous political dispensation in the country, that youth are being referred to as 'marginalised' or the 'lost generation'.

The CASE research project for the first time presented scientific content to the notion of "marginalisation" by constructing a twelve part index covering the concerns youth had listed as primary concerns. Through factor analysis, CASE was then able to differentiate three syndromes of youth "marginalisation". The "antagonists" are more politically alienated, racially antagonistic and hostile to the older generation than average. They may tend to disregard the law and see no positive future for themselves or South Africa. They are especially prevalent in the 20 to 24 year age category. The "outsiders" come more often than not from broken families and are alienated from their work or school environment, or are unemployed. They rarely belong to organisations and have a poor self-image. They are often found in squatter settlements, especially in the Western Cape. The third category, "victims", tend to have been abused as children, or are violently abused by their partners, or have had wide exposure to political violence. They are more prevalent than average in Gauteng and the Western Cape.

The CASE project also identified four different categories into which young people (between 16-30 years of age) could be grouped: 5% of young people were identified as extremely marginalised (eg. presently in prison or involved in criminal activities), 27% were identified as marginalised (eg. presently unemployed, having little education and little likelihood of acquiring a job or legal source of income), 43% were identified as being at risk of becoming marginalised (eg. presently at school but likely to leave school early or likely to be unemployed when he or she completes school) and 25% were identified as being fine (eg. presently employed).

In view of this analysis of the South African youth situation, youth are at the centre not only of the current development realities facing South Africa, but also more importantly, they will be at the centre of the future challenges with which the country will be faced. Youth has a crucial role to play in the restructuring of society. They are therefore also the 'new generation', a generation of people who will be responsible for sustaining the socio-political and economic changes taking place in the country today. Addressing the problems and the challenges of youth in South Africa is therefore central to the implementation of the Reconstruction and Development Programme (RDP) and the long-term prosperity of South Africa.

Much, however, still needs to be done on both the policy and practical levels to enhance the position of South African youth. On 16 June 1995 the South African government committed itself to protect and respect all children when President Nelson Mandela ratified the Convention on the Rights of the Child on behalf of the government. The Convention was drawn up by the United Nations to get countries to work together in the interest of all children. When countries accept the convention, they agree to ensure that all children live, develop normally and are protected in the best way possible. This will strengthen and support the South African Children's Charter which was adopted on 1 June 1992 by delegates at the International Children's Summit in Somerset West. The attention which President Nelson Mandela and Deputy President Thabo Mbeki are giving to youth issues, together with the implementation of the National Programme of Action (NPA) as a framework for the integration of all the policies and plans developed by government departments and non-governmental organisations to promote the well-being of children and the establishment of the National Youth Commission in 1996, are further encouraging steps in this regard.

In addition, an important support mechanism in this whole process is information. Access to and the availability of information on youth organisations and their work, support organisations such as career guidance providers and resource material relating to employment and study opportunities, can play an important role in assisting and supporting youth in addressing their individual and collective challenges.

The publishing of The Youth Book: A Directory of South African Youth Organisations, Service Providers and Resource Material will therefore make an important contribution in this regard. The contents of this publication will provide South African youth with a comprehensive source of information, while it will most definitely enhance cooperation between youth organisations and informed decision-making on youth-related issues.

Given the aims and objectives of the Reconstruction and Development Programme (RDP) to create a better future for all the people of South Africa, the country's most precious natural resource is its young people and there can be no process more important for the future of South Africa than the realisation of the potential of its youth. They are our hope for tomorrow as the future of the country will be in their hands.

Structure of Directory Information

THE YOUTH BOOK IS DIVIDED INTO THREE MAIN PARTS.

The first part, which is the background to the publication, consists of introductory comments by President Nelson Mandela, Founder and Chairperson of the Nelson Mandela Children's Fund (NMCF), Geraldine Fraser-Moleketi, Minister of Welfare and Population Development, Dr Jay Parsons, Representative of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) in South Africa and David Barnard, Coordinator of the Programme for Development Research (PRODDER) at the Human Sciences Research Council (HSRC) and editor of The Youth Book.

The second part consists of three directory sections, namely South African youth and children's organisations, South African educational institutions, including technical training colleges, technikons and universities, and Southern African and international youth organisations. The section on South African youth and children's organisations, the largest section of The Youth Book, consists of 44 sectoral chapters, with each organisation listed in a sectoral chapter representing its primary activity focus. Each organisation is at the same time also cross-referenced with other relevant sectoral chapters, indicated by keywords at the bottom of an entry. An overall sectoral index, combining the various cross references, will ensure easy access to the information in this section.

THE 44 SECTORAL CHAPTERS AND OVERALL SECTORAL INDEX INCLUDE THE FOLLOWING:

PRODDER

The South African Development Directory

Edited by David Barnard

This directory presents a comprehensive overview of the activities of all the major South African development role-players.

The directory is divided into two main parts. The first part, which is the background to the directory information, consists of introductory chapters by David Barnard, the editor of the PRODDER Directory, Jayendra Naidoo, Executive Director of the National Economic Development and Labour Council (NEDLAC), Raymond Parsons, Director General of the South African Chamber of Business (SACOB), Dr Ian Goldin, Chief Executive of the Development Bank of Southern Africa (DBSA), and David Whaley, Resident Representative of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in South Africa.

The second part consists of ten chapters, listing more than 1500 development-related organisations contributing to the development process in South Africa, including national and provincial government departments, parastatals, NGOs, CBOs, local and international donor agencies, embassies, research institutions and business organisations.

Information covered on each organisation include the following:
Name and acronym, contact detail (postal and street address / telephone / fax / e-mail / WWW), contact addresses of regional offices, contact people, mission statement, main development activities, target groups and geographical focus of activities.

A special chapter on the development contributions of companies advertising in this directory has also been included. To ensure easy access to the information in this directory, each entry is listed in both an alphabetical and sectoral index, with the sectoral index consisting of 51 development-related keywords.

STATE OF THE WORLD'S CHILDREN 1997

Summary

The world's approach to children has changed dramatically. When UNICEF was created 50 years ago - on 11 December 1946, in the aftermath of the most devastating war in history - it was out of concern that children would not be adequately protected in the overall relief effort under way in Europe. The international recognition that children required special attention was revolutionary at the time. At the end of the postwar reconstruction period, newly independent developing countries demanded that children's growing minds and bodies be given specific consideration, and UNICEF's relief mandate was enlarged to include child survival and development.

Now, the international approach to children has changed dramatically once again. The idea that children have special needs has given way to the conviction that children have rights, the same full spectrum of rights as adults: civil and political, social, cultural and economic.

This belief was expressed at the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which entered into international law on 2 September 1990, nine months after its adoption by the United Nations General Assembly. The Convention has since been ratified by all countries, except the Cook Islands, Oman, Somalia, Switzerland, the United Arab Emirates and the United States, making it the most widely ratified human rights convention in history. Ninety-six per cent of the world's children live in States that have ratified the Convention and these countries are legally obligated to protect children's rights.

This profound change is already beginning to have an impact. New laws have been passed and existing laws amended in numerous countries to conform to the Convention. In two striking examples of countries inspired by the Convention, Sierra Leone has demobilized child soldiers, and in Rwanda, children held in adult detention centres for alleged war offenses are being moved to special juvenile institutions, with UNICEF's assistance. Major initiatives such as the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, held in Stockholm in August 1996, and the International Conference on Child Labour, scheduled for October 1997 on Oslo, derive their impetus from the Convention.

UNICEF itself is at a turning-point. In its 50th year, the organization has adopted a mission statement that makes the Convention its guiding force. It will continue to work to alleviate the worst aspects of poverty for the world's children - as more than 12,5 million children under five in developing countries continue to die each year, 9 million of them from causes for which inexpensive solutions have been routinely applied in the industrialized world for half a century. UNICEF will specifically pursue the year 2000 goals established at the World Summit for Children in 1990. Action towards achieving these goals has already saved the lives of millions of children.

By expressing and protecting all the rights of children, the Convention throws a clear shaft of light on paths that extend beyond the year 2000. Some of these involve protecting children and youth in conflict with the criminal justice system. Others aim to ensure the development of the young child, to support families, to end the use of land-mines and to try to bring about a more equitable distribution of resources.

The most vulnerable children in all societies, rich and poor, must have first call on resources and efforts. The attempt to touch their lives will be complex and will require a sustained attack on the root causes of poverty and underdevelopment. In a world where technology and knowledge are available and easy to share, and per capita income has tripled in the past quarter of a century, there can be no excuses: the rights of all children, including those who are most disadvantaged, can be guaranteed.

Good intentions will now have to be matched with political will. Redirecting just one quarter of the developing world's military expenditure, for example, could provide enough additional resources to reach most of the goals for the year 2000. A similar shift in the targeting of development aid to basic social services - using 20 per cent of official development assistance - could generate much of the rest.

This kind of shift in the way the world uses its resources is no longer an appeal to the charity of those with the power and the purse-strings, but a matter of rights and obligations. Yet the new era in child rights will still need underpinning by popular pressure.

For the past 15 years, The State of the World's Children report has mobilized public and political support for child survival and development. Unfortunately, the need for passionate advocacy on behalf of the world's children has not diminished, even now, half a century after the need for UNICEF was internationally acknowledged. As Philip Alston, a leading child rights lawyer and activist, states: "In the final analysis, appropriate policies will be adopted ... only in response to widespread and insistent public outrage."

STATE OF THE WORLD'S CHILDREN 1997

Child Labour - Legislative Landmarks

From the first international child labour convention (1919), which saw working children in terms of wage employment in formal-sector manufacturing, the world's position on child labour has evolved and expanded over the years. It has come to address non-industrial work by children, and most recently, to prohibit any kind of work, paid or unpaid, that is injurious to children, and to set out safeguards and protection for children who work. States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, for example, are required to provide for a minimum age or minimum ages for admission to employment "having regard to the relevant provisions of other international instruments" (article 32). The laws outlined below are international landmarks in protecting children.

Convention on the Rights of the Child - Enshrines as interdependent and indivisible the full range of the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of all children that are vital to their survival, development, protection and participation in the lives of their societies. Because of this connection between children's rights and their survival and development, virtually all the Convention's articles address issues - such as education, health, nutrition, rest and relaxation, social security, the responsibility of parents - that are related to child labour an its effects on children. One of the tenets of the Convention is that in all actions concerning children, their best interests should be taken fully into account. Article 32 recognizes children's right to be protected from work that threatens their health, education or development and enjoins States parties to set minimum ages for employment and to regulate working conditions. Ratifications: 187 States as of mid-September 1996.

1996

International Labour Organization (ILO) proposes for discussion a new convention on hazardous child labour or the elimination of the most intolerable forms of child labour.

ENTREPRENEURSHIP, ENTREPRENEUR AND ENTERPRISING CULTURE

What is entrepreneurship?

Entrepreneurship is the process of doing something new and something different for the purpose of creating wealth for the individual and adding value to society.

Who is an entrepreneur?

An entrepreneur is a person who undertakes a wealth-creating and value adding process, through incubating ideas, assembling resources and making things happen.

What is enterprising culture?

Enterprising culture is a commitment of the individual to the continuing pursuit of opportunities and developing an entrepreneurial endeavour to its growth potentials for the purpose of creating wealth for the individual and adding value to society.

STATE OF THE WORLD'S CHILDREN 1996

The 1980s: Campaign for Child Survival

As the 1980s - the third Development Decade - dawned, the countries of the developing world were beginning to feel the chill of global recession, with serious repercussions for their poorest people. For the children's cause, however, there were at least some signs of hope, and the success of IYC suggested that the time was right for a further initiative.

In December 1982, in The State of the World's Children report, UNICEF's Executive Director, James P. Grant, launched an initiative known as the "child survival revolution", later to include child development. This campaign reversed conventional wisdom. Rates of infant and young child mortality had previously been seen as a measure of a country's development. Now UNICEF suggested a direct attack on infant and child mortality as an instrument of development.

In a throw-back to the great disease campaigns of the 1950s, UNICEF proposed to vanquish common infections of early childhood using simple medical technologies. From the primary health care package, it singled out four techniques, which collectively were referred to as "GOBI": "G" for growth monitoring to keep a regular check on child wellbeing; "O" for oral rehydration therapy to treat bouts of childhood diarrhoea; "B" for breastfeeding as the perfect nutritional start in life; and "I" for immunization against the six vaccine-preventable childhood killers: tuberculosis, diphtheria, whooping cough, tetanus, polio and measles. One of the strengths of GOBI was that all the techniques were low cost.

The campaign found an extraordinary degree of worldwide resonance. This accumulation of popular and political support was not accidental. During the 1980s, UNICEF developed and fine-tuned a strategy of "social mobilization", enlisting support from every nook and cranny of society - from religious leader to Goodwill Ambassadors, from sports personalities to parliamentarians - to joint the child survival movement and spread its message.

Of the four "GOBI" elements, the expanded programme on immunization was taken up with the greatest enthusiasm in the largest number of countries. And in November 1985, at a ceremony to commemorate the UN's 40th anniversary, nations recommitted themselves to the target originally set in 1977 - universal child immunization by 1990. A goal that a few years before had seemed completely unattainable was now within striking distance. During the 1980s, nutritional status improved in every region, and extraordinary progress was made in access to safe drinking water. By the end of the decade, the "child survival and development revolution" was estimated to have saved the lives of 12 million children.

This also had the effect of pushing the children's health cause up the national and international agenda. But support for human-created development was also coming from a number of other directions. And the activities of women were also changing many development perspectives: since the Women's Conference in Mexico City in 1975, women had been increasingly successful in getting their voices heard.

At the same time, there was mounting pressure for the rights of children - and for the needs of children who were under particular stress - including the disabled; those living and working on city streets; victims of mass violence and warfare; and children suffering from exploitation - as workers and labourers, or as objects of commercial sexual gratification. In the mid-1980s, UNICEF coined a new term to cover all these categories of childhood disadvantage - children in especially difficult circumstances (CEDC).

While UNICEF was analysing CEDC situations and evolving policy responses, the international children's NGOs were more concerned with advocacy and legislation. In 1987, UNICEF too put energy into child rights legislation. Although its support arrived relatively late, UNICEF's capacity for international mobilization was decisive. In 1989, the United Nations General Assembly adopted the Convention on the rights of the Child. On 2 September 1990, the Convention entered into force as international law. Within a year, more than 90 countries had ratified and by end-September 1995, the total was 179. No human rights convention has ever attained such widespread ratification, nor so quickly.

Almost simultaneously, the campaign for child survival and development reached a peak when on 30 September 1990, 71 Heads of State and government took their seats at a World Summit for Children and signed a World Declaration. This contained a 10-point Plan of Action with child-related human development goals for the year 2000. These included reductions in infant and maternal mortality, child malnutrition and illiteracy, as well as targeted levels of access to basic services for health and family planning, education, water and sanitation.

STATE OF THE WORLD'S CHILDREN 1996

The 1990s: A Decade for Children's Rights

The Children's Summit was a star-studded and spectacular event. But it has not been allowed to vanish into the past as a one-off occurrence. Instead, it was used as a launching pad for a process of planning for children. Within three years of the World Summit for Children, 105 industrial and developing countries, covering a total of 88 per cent of the world's children, had prepared national programmes of action for meeting the Summit goals. In addition, a set of mid-decade goals for children were established.

In 1996, countries are due to report formally at the UN on their progress towards the goals for the year 2000. They will be reports of some triumph. Many countries in Asia, Latin America and selectively in the Middle East have made significant progress. In sub-Saharan Africa, several countries will show improvement in at least half the goals. Still other African countries are in such a state of turmoil and economic crisis that for their leaders the vision of the Summit goals has already sunk below the horizon. UNICEF, therefore, for the rest of the decade will continue to put much of its energies into helping countries reach their child-centred targets.

The Convention on the Rights of the Child has already proved to be an effective framework for international action. The Convention established social and economic rights - the right to survival, early development, education, health care and social welfare support. But it also covers civil and political rights. These include the right of the child to a name and nationality, to freedom of expression and to participation in decisions affecting his or her well-being. Further rights include protection from discrimination on grounds of gender, race or minority status, as well as from sexual and other forms of exploitation.

The key underlying advance was the recognition of the child as a complete individual. The Convention establishes that the child has an identity distinct from those of parent or nurturers and that the community has a duty to protect that identity and to enable the child to express it in matters such as guardianship or custody. In these areas, the overarching consideration should be "the best interests of the child". In the years following 1990, the Convention has become the most widely recognized and ratified international human rights instrument in history. As of end-September 1995, 179 countries had become "States Parties".

The post-Summit process and the Convention of the Rights of the Child have nelped maintain the momentum on behalf of children. In the 1990s, however, the prospects for the fight against poverty generally appear less promising. Starting in the 1980s, Africa, in particular, has suffered from a seemingly endless succession of emergencies - mostly caused by, or associated with, drought. Worse was to follow in the form of political breakdown. In the 1990s, the collapse of frail political and administrative structures has pushed a number of countries - Liberia, Rwanda, Sierra Leone and Somalia - towards the ultimate condition of post-colonial breakdown: the "failed State".

In these emergency arenas, the children's agenda has been dominated by the combination of war with ongoing economic and environmental disaster. This has dashed developmental prospects and redirected attention towards issues concerned with children in war. To an organization born among the detritus of war, it sometimes seems as if the historical wheel has come full circle.

UNITED NATION'S CHILDREN'S FUND (UNICEF)

The State of the World's Children 1997.

Children's rights are the foundation on which better societies can be built, and a detailed blueprint exists in the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The State of the World's Children 1997 report explores some of the implications of this ground-breaking treaty for children - now on the verge of becoming the first universal law - with a particular focus on the moving subject of child labour. Just as no child should die of preventable illnesses, the report argues no child should labour in hazardous and exploitative conditions.

While it is impossible to cite a single authoritative figure, it is clear that the number of child workers worldwide runs into hundreds of millions, many of them toiling in largely unseen tasks. Although some of their work promotes or enhances their development, without interfering with schooling, recreation and rest, much of it is palpably destructive. Poor children face such hazards, the report says, because they are exploited.

The problem is complex, but there are a vast range of ideas and a large and growing body of experience on how to break the cycle of child labour and poverty. Relevant education and stronger social partnerships to ease the effects of poverty are among the strategies examined. The report also suggests steps to eliminate child labour, always taking into account the best interests of the child.

The State of the World's Children 1996.

Founded in the aftermath of World War II, UNICEF's original mission was to alleviate the suffering of children in wars. Fifty year's later, children's lives are still being shattered by conflict. The State of the World's Children 1996 is a special anniversary edition. It sets out an Anti-War Agenda - a series of realistic and practical steps the world can take to redress the shocking violence against children.

War has taken a terrible toll on children. In the past decade, some two million have been killed, 4-5 million disabled, 12 million left homeless, more than 1 million orphaned or separated from their parents and some 10 million psychologically traumatised. The report also says more children are being recruited as fighting soldiers. In 1988 alone, they numbered as many as 20 000.

In times of war, even children who remain "civilians" are subjected to horrific experiences. Girls face the prospect of sexual violence. Wars have also been adding to the huge numbers of uprooted people. Around 53 million people have been forced into flight, either displaced within their own countries, or as refugees seeking protection elsewhere. At least half are children.

There are also other causes of death. The report says during conflicts, around 20 times more people die from lack of food and medical services, combined with the stress of flight, than from weapons. A further tragedy of war haunts children even when conflict ends, the ever-present threat of anti-personnel landmines. It argues that respect for children and commitment to their welfare are key to humanitarian and political progress. In this regard it sets out an Anti-War Agenda for action.

State of the World's Children 1995.

The publication argues that the time has come to see the issue of protecting and investing in the growing minds and bodies of children not as a matter of peripheral concern, to be dealt with by a little extra sympathy and charity, but as an issue which is integral to economic and social development. Following the 1990 World Summit for Children, an important beginning has been made.

The Summit set specific goals, to be achieved by the year 2000, for the reduction of malnutrition, preventable disease, and illiteracy. It was subsequently agreed that several of these goals could and should be achieved by the end of 1995. The State of the World's Children 1995 asks what practical progress has been made.

Overall, it finds that a majority of the goals set for 1995 are likely to be met by a majority of the developing nations. Malnutrition has been reduced, immunisation levels are being maintained or increased, large areas of the developing world have become free of polio, iodine and vitamin A deficiency are being eliminated, ORT is preventing more than a million child deaths a year, and progress in primary education is being resumed.

STATE OF THE WORLD'S CHILDREN 1996

Towards 2000 and Beyond

Nowadays, the fight against world poverty can no longer be viewed uniformly. Effective responses to problems of poverty have to derive from regional, national and local level, the development challenge has become more complex. In many countries, the potential of health technology to improve the lives of children will largely have been realized before the end of the century.

Polio, guinea worm disease and iodine deficiency disorders are dwindling fast. The greater use of oral rehydration salts (ORS) means that diarrhoeal diseases such as cholera no longer represent the threat they once did, and the spread of anti-biotics means that respiratory infections are on the run. Other threats - malaria and AIDS - still remain. But by the year 2000, it is conceivable that in many countries, the promise of "Health for All" will have been delivered.

Other parts of the anti-poverty quest are more complex - and less susceptible to technical intervention. The eradication of such symptoms of poverty as illiteracy, environmental squalor, food insecurity and the exploitation of children in the workplace are challenges of a different order. They will demand significant changes in social attitudes and behaviours.

To some extent, the same is true in the health area. Even the most effective health education and information campaigns tend to reach no more than a certain proportion of their target populations. The final 10 per cent of children or households still unreached by measles vaccine, or ORS packets, or sanitary latrines, or basic nutrition, may be as difficult to reach as the first 90 per cent. This final part of any campaign demands a different approach - which specifically identifies and targets the unreached.

This is where the twin movements on behalf of children - one based on "rights", the other on "needs" - coalesce. The rights approach focuses on those who are disadvantaged by denial of specific legally constituted rights.

But reaching children with "basic needs" will - under the terms of the Convention on the Rights of the Child - target a virtually identical group. Those who are disadvantaged by unmet rights and those who are disadvantaged by unmet needs are ultimately the same children.

Over the past decade, children's emergence as a topic of public and political concern has been truly striking. The 1990 World Summit for Children and the passage of the Convention on the Rights of the Child have served to consolidate the presence of children and young people in political and social debate.

This is also of course a reflection of long-term changes in societies. Decades of modernization and urbanization have changed many attitudes. Following this century's vast improvements in child survival and development, parents have greater hopes for their children and they expect more for them.

STATE OF THE WORLD'S CHILDREN 1997

The Power of Education

A comprehensive strategy to combat hazardous child labour must begin with its logical alternative: high-quality schools and relevant educational programmes to which families will want to send their children and in which children will want to participate.

There are 140 million children between the ages of 6 and 11 not attending school - 23 per cent of primary school age children in developing countries - and perhaps an equal number who drop out of school early. If all those under 18 are considered to be children, as the Convention of the Rights of the Child stipulates, the figure out of school rises to 404 million, or 38 per cent of that age group. Many of these children work, many in jobs that are disabling and dangerous. Millions more are trying hard to balance the demands of work and schooling, a juggling act that poses particular problems for girls.

ILO, reflecting a broad consensus, takes the position that the single most effective way to stem the flow of school age children into abusive forms of employment or work is to extend and improve schooling so that it will attract and retain them.

Education and child labour interact profoundly. As we have seen, work can keep children away from school. At the same time, poor-quality education often causes children to drop out of school and start working at an early age. Good-quality education, on the other hand, can keep children away from work. The longer and better the education, the lesser the likelihood that a child will be forced into damaging work.

The Convention on the Rights of the Child insists that primary education must be universal and compulsory. If governments delivered on their legal commitment to this, the extent of exploitative child labour would be significantly reduced. The resources to create good schools all over the world could be found if the will was there. What is more, innovative thinking about how to regenerate the education system is well under way, and successful programmes exist all over the world that could serve as models.

Any improvement made to education - whether by changing existing schools, by setting up creative and flexible approaches to education or by targeting working children specifically - will have a positive impact on child labour. The more we do, the greater will be the results. What more powerful incentive could there be?

EDUCATION FOR ALL: A GOAL WITHIN REACH

Six years ago at the World Conference on Education for All held in Jomtien, Thailand, 155 countries pledged to take the necessary steps to provide primary education for all children and massively reduce adult illiteracy by the end of the decade. This year we are joining forces to organize a high-level meeting at Amman, Jordan in June, to assess what has been done - by nations and by the international community - to fulfil these commitments. At the same time Amman will provide an excellent opportunity for all nations to review their goals and strategies for expanding access to and improving the quality of basic education within a reasonable timeframe.

The balance sheet over the last six years is mixed. Much progress has been made in education in terms of higher enrolments, better quality and greater relevance in many countries. In particular, nine of the world's most populous countries - Bangladesh, Brazil, China, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Mexico, Nigeria and Pakistan - are working together to achieve Education for All. Even countries with a modest GNP per capita, such as Sri Lanka and Zimbabwe, are providing primary schooling to eight or more children out of ten. Such success stories demonstrate clearly that education for all is achievable and can become a reality within a few years.

But much more needs to be done. There are still 130 million children in the world who have no access to school, and the majority of them are girls. A large proportion of children, one third or more in many countries, do not complete primary eduction. Even of those who do finish, many do not acquire the essential skills and knowledge expected from primary education. Far too many children will soon join the world's 885 million illiterate adults, most of whom are women. Secondary education, so vital for development, is accessible only to 17 per cent of Sub-Saharan Africa's children. Thus it is clear that a much more concerted effort is needed to expand and improve educational opportunities, especially for girls and women.

It is unacceptable that a world that spends approximately US$800 billion a year on weapons cannot find the money needed - an estimated US$ 6 billion per year - to put every child in school by the year 2000. A mere one per cent decrease in military expenditure worldwide would be sufficient in financial terms. In Sub-Saharan Africa, only US$2,5 billion per year would be needed to provide universal primary education. The international community and the developing world can and must invest in education, particularly in primary education, to achieve economic growth and poverty reduction.

The Amman meeting will be a milestone on the road to Education for All, which has well-known positive effects on economic development, infant mortality rates, reproductive health, birth rates, and the empowerment of people, especially women. Decisive and radical solutions must be found at both international and national levels to the problems that countries face in meeting the basic learning needs of their populations.

International commitment to the goal of Education for All has been reaffirmed at major global conferences, such as the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women. But declarations of intent are not enough. No real breakthrough will be possible unless the commitment is translated into a serious rethinking of resource priorities on the part of national leaders and the international community alike. We wish to stress our conviction that basic education for all is not only a human right, but also the cornerstone of human development. Having access to quality basic education is probably the single most effective means to ensure democracy, sustainable development and peace.

(Statement issued in preparation for the International Consultative Forum on Education for All, 16-19 June 1996)

YOUTH IN THE NEW SOUTH AFRICA: TOWARDS POLICY FORMULATION

Does South Africa have a "youth crisis"?

The short answer to this question is: no. This may sound like a provocative and overconfident response, but if the problems in defining youth as a social category are borne in mind, it should be clear that "youth" is not seen as a unified entity with a collective consciousness in pursuit of clearly defined objectives. Youth as a social category reflect society's potential for the future. If society is in crisis, then that potential is threatened and youth in its various manifestations will reflect that crisis. South African society has been and, to a certain extent, still is in deep crisis. If this were not so, there would not have been any fundamental transition. The transition itself is an attempt to profoundly change the political, social and economic life of our country, precisely because these areas of societal life were and are in crisis. If we argue that there is no "youth crisis" as such, then we certainly do not mean to imply that youth does not find itself in crisis.

YOUTH IN THE NEW SOUTH AFRICA: TOWARDS POLICY FORMULATION

From the findings of the research it became evident that religion plays an important role in the life of the South African Indian youth. While religion is considered an important facet of life by the youth it is interesting to note that religion is not merely understood as a belief system at a theoretical level but rather its practical application in the larger society is considered imperative.

The majority of those interviewed, 60%, intimated that they adhered to their religious teachings and principles "very strictly" or "strictly", which supports the above contention, religion is seen to exercise a marked influence on the personal development of the Indian youth, that religion and religious leaders provide assistance in times of stress and personal or societal crisis; and that in general the youth perceived religion as fulfilling a vital social function and that society can be influenced positively if religious principles are strongly adhered to, although not in a divisive manner but to assist in the process of social integration and interaction.

Furthermore, "the majority of the youth maintained that their religion espoused the ideas of humanistic ideologic and equality", and "that these principles are not confined to their respective communities but embraces South African society at large irrespective of creed and race". It was also "strongly maintained that organised religion can act as a positive catalyst in the reconstruction of South African society"; that a "democratic South African should espouse the principle of freedom of religion", that religious leaders should be involved in the drafting of the new constitution; and that a healthy relationship of mutual respect and co-operation should exist between the sectors of religion and state.

The youth also maintained that "they could play a meaningful role in contributing to social harmony through intergroup interaction", and also "expressed concern that they should not be marginalised but wanted to be integrally involved in add[illegible] the numerous socio-political issues in a pro-active manner in creating a harmonious and integrated South Africa".

HUMAN SCIENCES RESEARCH COUNCIL (HSRC)

The Human Sciences Research Council (HSRC) was established in 1969 in terms of the HSRC Act (No 23 of 1968) to undertake, promote, support and coordinate research in the humanities and the social sciences and to disseminate research results, facilitate and evaluate their implementation and to stimulate the development of research capacity.

The HSRC is committed to using public funds allocated to it for research and research promotion to achieve maximum benefits for all people in this period of socio-economic transformation and democratisation. As such, the HSRC undertakes research in support of societal goals as well as developing research capacity in the human sciences through funding research-related activities at universities, technikons and research NGOs. This has led to the HSRC being organized into two main divisions: the Research Division and the Science Development Division (Centre for Science Development). The Research Division is made up of three research groups, namely Education, Human Resources and Social Dynamics. The Centre for Science Development in turn, is concerned with the allocation and utilisation of a range of resources for the benefit of the human sciences community.

The mission of the Human Sciences Research Council (HSRC) is to conduct research relevant to social needs in order to improve the quality of life of all South Africans, to maintain a high scientific standard and ensure that the most appropriate methodology is utilised and to ensure the recruitment and development of researchers with appropriate knowledge and skills.

YOUTH IN THE NEW SOUTH AFRICA: TOWARDS POLICY FORMULATION

Youth Involvement

Much of what is said about youth involvement and development also has a bearing on the areas of education, economics and politics. The country's youth are ready and willing to be politically involved in local as well as central government, in reconstruction programmes, in community upliftment, etc. Yet they often express frustration because they are not being involved and consulted, and receive little guidance in this regard from authorities. Much of what has happened in South Africa during the past ten years has shown that democracy, partnership and co-operation are the keywords when dealing with youth. A major implication is the urgent need to redefine the relationship between youth and specific categories of adults.

Professional groups such as teachers and social workers can no longer be controllers and manipulators: they need to become the champions of the youth. Teacher/pupil relations should be more co-operative, and teacher training should reflect this. Schools, courts and the police should also be more open to negotiation and greater co-operation with younger people.

YOUTH IN THE NEW SOUTH AFRICA: TOWARDS POLICY FORMULATION

Urbanisation

The country's rapid urbanisation has significant implications for policy related to youth. Urbanisation promotes unity by means of promoting a Westernised "common culture" among youth - which is not the same as a "common youth culture" that may be used to characterise youth as a mass. At the same time diversity and individuality are encouraged by township, fashion, religious and other sub-cultures. However, it is clear that the lack of adequate housing, facilities and jobs, and the social deterioration that goes with badly managed urbanisation are at the heart of the various crises in South African society.

In the period 1960 to 1990 the black presence in the urban environment increased by 12,7 million. In comparison the white and Asian communities had already been substantially urbanised by 1960 and consequently there has been little change for them in urbanisation patterns. Urbanisation amongst the coloured community has increased significantly, but not nearly to the extent as in the black community.

South Africa's population shows a lesser degree of urbanisation when urban and rural ratios are compared to those in upper middle-income countries around the world. South Africa's urban population was calculated at about 60% of its total population in 1990, compared with a 71% average for other middle-income countries.

Housing

The house or other structure in which young people grow up is the most important space in their lives. It may provide the family and living environment, a sense of security and stability, a socio-cultural context, a place to study and the privacy of one's own room, media such as television, books, newspapers and magazines, and so forth. However, for a young person living in an overcrowded shack with no real "family life", security or personal space, these "luxuries" that are taken for granted in an affluent society, are unknown.

South Africa is experiencing rapid population growth and rapid urbanisation. This has been exacerbated by complex bureaucracies and a lack of prioritising on a national level. The provision of housing has consequently fallen far behind the increasing needs of certain sections of the population.

Recent survey results indicate that 20% of blacks live in shacks and 9% in huts, while 97% of the other groups live in permanent structures other than huts and shacks. While black housing provision in particular has become entirely inadequate, surpluses are being evidenced in white housing.

The SAY survey revealed that basic amenities available in the broad community are as follows: 54% of households have a water tap in the home, 43% have electricity, 41% have waterborne sewerage, 19% have a bucket toilet, 40% have refuse removal, 36% have tarred roads and 38% have street lighting.

Other data suggest unequal access to television - 53% of blacks in general, and 70% of blacks in metropolitan areas, have access to television compared to 93% of other races.

YOUTH IN THE NEW SOUTH AFRICA: TOWARDS POLICY FORMULATION

The Information Super Highway: Linking Schools with Computer Networks

The 'Information Super Highway' is the term coined by US Vice President Al Gore to the envisaged linking up of schools and public institutions in the US with electronic networks, databases and libraries. In our country such a process would address the problem of too few libraries and information sources by providing direct access to electronic dictionaries, encyclopedias and other books. Presently this electronic linkage refers mainly to computer access to networks such as Internet, but as TV and computer technologies merge, it could soon also include network access via television apparatus. At the moment there are numerous US sponsored educational initiatives and opportunities available on the Internet to educators and pupils world-wide. Unfortunately, due to computer illiteracy and the lack of computer infrastructure at most of our schools, connecting up with these networks is not a practical option in the short term. In the long term however, as access to networks becomes more readily available, the advantages offered by the electronic educational initiatives freely available on the Internet make the 'Information Super Highway' an opportunity South African educators dare not ignore.

It seems evident that all of the electronic media could be used with some measure of success in additional educational initiatives aimed at reaching youth and children in disadvantaged communities, and that a multi-media approach using as many media as possible would probably yield the best results. Holding particular promise are the new interactive electronic media, but only if used in well-planned ventures that would make the interactive broadcasts available to specific audiences at venues (such as community centres) housing the necessary equipment. The final conclusion reached therefore is that the establishing of such community centres in disadvantaged communities and equipping them with electronic educational media, is the best starting strategy for providing our youth with additional educational opportunities.

YOUTH IN THE NEW SOUTH AFRICA: TOWARDS POLICY FORMULATION

Cultural and Recreational Life

Recreation, particularly sport, and (sub)cultural activities are important in young people's lives. They encourage creativity, team participation and striving for achievement, a sense of belonging to a peer group and the meaningful use of leisure time. Yet, in disadvantaged communities there is an appalling lack of facilities, infrastructure and organisational structures, as was indicated in the HSRC Investigation into Sport and other related research. Figures provided by Scholtz suggest that 41,7% of male youth and 18,7% of female youth in South Africa were active members of sports clubs at the time of the investigation (1993). The figures for black participation in club and league sport were 32,8% for young males and 26,3% for females. For coloureds the figures were 44,1% and 25,5%; for Indians 18,3% and 15,8% and for whites 28,3% and 30%. The frequency of participation in sport was much higher in the case of white and Asian youth. This might suggest that circumstances and/or facilities differed. Figures for participation in youth clubs and cultural organisations were much lower - 16,3% of all youth belonged to a youth club, only 8,4% belonged to a cultural organisation.

YOUTH IN THE NEW SOUTH AFRICA: TOWARDS POLICY FORMULATION

Youth and Culture

If by culture is meant a system of values, knowledge, beliefs and actions through which people make sense of their lives and establish their identity, then culture is of central importance to every young person. Internationally, youth share a 'common culture', yet at subcultural level there are vast differences. Shared fashions, music and other forms of popular culture contribute to a sense of identity, while subcultural influences such as drugs and gangsterism have a destructive influence. In South Africa, little effort is being made to investigate these powerful subcultural influences, some of which can be harnessed constructively. It should be recognised that culture was targeted by apartheid for social engineering and many questions about ethnicity have been raised. The SAY research gives examples of ethnicity as both a positive force (for inculcating community values) and a negative factor (that encourages ethnocentrism and racism).

The SAY studies surveyed below affirm that one cannot really speak of a single, monolithic 'youth culture'. In an era of rapid social transformation, stereotyped cultural oppositions such as urban/rural, elitist/popular, modern/traditional are also losing their essential distinctive value. For example, some research suggests that the relatively subordinate position that youth occupied in 'traditional', conservative societies has changed with urbanisation and Westernisation. Recognition of youth's new, more assertive position has important implications for policy formulation regarding their diversity and their ability not only to react to change and development, but actually to help guide it. One study showed that, in spite of lingering signs of racism, 60% of adolescents from all the population groups preferred to identify themselves as 'South African', which may indicate an increasing sense of shared identity, if not unity. The present processes of societal transformation and democratisation make the promotion of a shared culture and values essential; something that should start at school level.

Since young people are by nature creative and energetic, areas of recreational, cultural and other creative activities offer many opportunities for reconstruction programmes. These activities could effectively counter the destructive cycle of boredom, aimlessness, drug and alcohol abuse, lack of care, etc.

YOUTH IN THE NEW SOUTH AFRICA: TOWARDS POLICY FORMULATION

Job Aspirations of Young South Africans

Young South Africans have a wide range of job aspirations. Haines and Wood found that the respondents in their survey aspired to work as teachers (27%), as professions (25%), managers (15%), clerical or service workers (10%) and factory workers (8%). They found that, `as a second best option', and if unable to find a job, 60% of the respondents would either open a business or become involved in informal sector activity. This suggests that the young people in the survey preferred to work in the stability of the formal economy. They saw the informal sector as a last resort to which they would turn only if they become desperate.

YOUTH IN THE NEW SOUTH AFRICA: TOWARDS POLICY FORMULATION

Family Structure

Obviously the breakdown of family structures in the country, aggravated by rapid and enforced social changes, has a considerable negative influence on youth. However within the context of discussing a general youth policy it will serve little purpose to do more than mention the main considerations regarding this complex societal issue that requires its own policy focus. According to Reynolds family units are the social units that best secure the interests and care of youth, especially those younger than 20 years of age, and consist essentially of a network of relationships. The family should not be defined only generically, but also in terms of its links with larger state and local authority structures responsible for housing, health, welfare, and so on. Furthermore, family units are especially vulnerable to negative forces, such as political turmoil, change, divorce and migratory labour.

Young people need to feel part of a family and community in order to develop a sense of self-worth. They should be 'active participants in improving the social and political world in which they are living'. It has been found that although youth often do not experience this sense of belonging, they still nevertheless try against the odds to maintain an illusion of control over their own lives.

Stability may be found in nuclear, extended, compound or single-parent families. The extended kinship system among blacks and Asians seems to cushion the negative effects of disrupted nuclear family units. However, many youths are not experiencing lasting stability and surveys reveal that a lot of young people are receiving only fragmented care. The lack of control, supervision and attention is clearly linked to teenagers' negative behaviour such as alcohol and drug abuse, crime, indiscriminate and unprotected sexual activities, etc.

YOUTH IN THE NEW SOUTH AFRICA: TOWARDS POLICY FORMULATION

Youth Demographics

Against the backdrop of population figures it is necessary to know the number of young people in South Africa and their distribution across the country. At the beginning of the nineties, their position as one of the largest population categories had been firmly established. Moreover, the world's population is getting younger and teenage pregnancies have become a phenomenon of our time.

Thirty-seven per cent of South Africa's population were below the age of 15 in 1991. This can be compared with the average of 40% for similar countries in the world, less-developed countries averaging 44% and industrialised countries 23%.

In 1991 the group between 15 and 30 years, constituted 29,5% of South Africa's population. Figures for racial categories indicate a total of 8 373 693 (75%) black, 1 371 484 (12%) white, 1 102 188 (10%) coloured and 299 740 (3%) Asian youths in this group.

This means that in 1991 no less than 67% of the country's population was in the age category younger than 30. It was fitting that 'the New South Africa' should be entered with so many young people who in the near future would be in a position to shape its destiny.

Age segmentation of the youth further shows that in 1991 there were 3 949 490 (35,4%) young people between the ages of 15 and 19, 3 505 057 (31,4%) between 20 and 25, 3 112 192 (27,9%) between 25 and 29 and 580 363 (5,2%) were 30 years of age.

Between 1985 and 1991 the 15 to 19 age group grew the fastest. Growth rates among age groups above and below this cohort declined, and only the nil to four year group among blacks exhibited positive growth.

At the beginning of the nineties, 56% of young people lived in what was then regarded as a 'common' area, 28% lived in the self-governing areas and 18% in the TBVC states. Black youth were distributed as follows: 40% in the 'common' area, 37% in the self-governing areas and 24% in the TBVC countries.

According to a recent survey 43% of youths (aged 16 to 30) were born in rural areas, 32% in smaller towns, 23% in metropolitan areas and (although this may be doubted) only 1% in squatter areas. It can be accepted that rural lifestyles and urbanisation will remain major factors in the lives of many young South Africans.

YOUTH IN THE NEW SOUTH AFRICA: TOWARDS POLICY FORMULATION

The Enigma of Youth as a Social Category

Given the nature of the conflict in South Africa over the decades - particularly the last four - the concept of youth became part of the prevailing political, racial, ethnic and socio-economic tensions. The underlying structural conditions almost compelled analysts to think of youth in racial/ethnic terms. `White youth' in uniform were either `fighting the total onslaught' or were `the enemy of liberation'; `black youth' were `lost', `rebellious', `irresponsible' or were in `the frontline of the struggle for justice and freedom'. Youth as a social category in the South African context invited hyperbole and rhetorical extravagance and thus led to stereotypes which obscured and confused.

Any attempt at gaining conceptual clarity when talking about youth is a frustrating and enigmatic exercise. Whilst it is trite to say that life itself is a process and not an event, this observation gets specific meaning when one tries to pin down youth as a social category. Infancy, adulthood, old age, marriage, birth, death are concepts that enable us to identify clear patterns of social interaction and institutional organisation. In relatively stable societies, organised education provides the best arena in which to explore the transient characteristics of youth; but in unstable, unequal and deeply polarised and divided societies, problems in educational organisation very often add to the difficulties in coming to grips with youth as a social category.

YOUTH IN THE NEW SOUTH AFRICA: TOWARDS POLICY FORMULATION

Unemployment and Youth

The results of the SAY survey indicate that at the time of the survey roughly 42% of youth between the ages of 15 and 30 were unemployed. Young women were particularly disadvantaged. In the first place, they were less likely to be part of the labour force because large numbers were involved in unpaid domestic work. Secondly, they found it difficult to find employment while being involved in unpaid domestic work. Hall and Mabitsela maintain that unemployment affects the unmarried, junior members of households more adversely than the other members. These authors also note that unemployment is higher in the previous homelands and in peri-urban areas that comprise informal settlements close to the major metropoles. It is however unclear as to whether unemployment is higher in rural or in urban areas.

Moller concludes that family support is the major source of social security of the unemployed in South Africa and that the black community carries the full burden of the unemployment in their midst. This is confirmed by the results of the SAY survey which suggest that about 60% of the black youth obtained money for their daily expenses from parents and relatives.

On the basis of census statistics, Hall and Mabitsela found that a higher level of education was associated with a great likelihood of employment for the population as a whole. Their calculations of unemployment rates varied from close to 30% for those with less than matric, 21% for those with matric and up to 8% for those with post-secondary education. Their results suggest that black matriculants face higher unemployment rates than submatriculants, and they also concluded that school qualifications did not necessarily increase the chances of finding employment, except insofar as improved qualifications opened the way for further training.

AUDIT OF THE YOUTH DEVELOPMENT SECTOR

Lessons for South Africa

Youth policy and provision in South Africa is still in its infancy and there is immense potential for far reaching changes to be effected in this field.

In all of the European countries reviewed, the benefits to participants take a number of forms, but the two most prominent are personal needs and personal development of youth. As far as personal needs and personal development are concerned, all of the countries reviewed have elaborate welfare systems and vibrant voluntary sectors which take responsibility for assisting youth according to their individual needs. Under these circumstances, a youth culture has developed which is inward looking, consumption inclined, and pleasure oriented, and to some extent segregated from adult responsibilities and values. South African youth policy and provision should guard against creating a system of youth provision which impedes the transition to adulthood by increasing or prolonging the dependency of youth. This can perhaps best be accomplished by the creation of institutions and activities that involve young people in responsible roles and that at the same time cater for personal needs and personal development.

Three of the five European countries reviewed, namely, Germany, Britain and Norway have placed a strong emphasis on cultural integration of youth. South Africa has a fragmented past where ignorance and the lack of knowledge of fellow citizens existed because of the racial divide. Furthermore, these deep divisions were complicated by the gulf between the rich and poor, the technologically advantaged and those with obsolescent skills. Youth service policy and provision would be well advised to recognise these factors and create capacity for cultural integration in youth services which would target divisions of class, ethnicity, race, gender, religion and geographical region. The German model of youth policy and provision during the immediate post-war years is exemplary in this regard.

All the countries reviewed (including the developing African nations) have oriented their youth policy and provision towards economic development and productivity. Economic development in youth services may place direct emphasis on development infrastructure and productive capacity, which is explicit in the developing nations reviewed. Alternatively, economic development in incorporated into youth services by an emphasis on youth employment and entrepreneurial activity. From the literature review, it is clear that during the 1980s, a distinct change in direction occurred in Britain and Australia, where greater attention was placed on community-based youth employment and entrepreneurial activities. The results of this shift in emphasis are not yet available, but with a youth unemployment rate of 52%, youth policy and provision should perhaps investigate the appropriateness of such an emphasis in our country.

The European countries reviewed maintain advanced economies, and all of them place a strong emphasis on economic education and training. This trend holds true not only for the countries reviewed, but also in youth development activities in much of the world, where education and job training are being increasingly stressed. Germany, in particular, has recognised that formal schooling does not have a sufficient format for individual education. There is too much to learn, and schooling cannot cover all of it. Youth services are therefore organised as informal education to supplement classroom education. In Germany, youth education and training is expressed as human capital development, while in Japan youth education and training is regarded as investment in an economic asset. Both the German and Japanese systems of youth education and training are national investment strategies, as opposed to the more conventional welfare strategies used by many other nations. Youth policy and provision in South Africa needs to consider the integration of education and training capacities with a strong economic emphasis if we are to integrate our youth in the global economic village.

The lessons mentioned above suggest some directions that youth service provision in South Africa could explore.

GLOBAL PROFILE OF YOUTH

Over one and a half billion people are between the ages of 10 and 24, accounting for almost 30 percent of the world's total population. By the year 2025, their numbers are projected to reach nearly 2 billion.

Overall, the health status of youth is improving, and today's young people are more likely to complete secondary school than any previous generation.

Though girls are reaching puberty at younger ages, in many countries, they are actually beginning sexual relations at a later age than did older generations. This trend is strongest in sub-Saharan Africa, but is also evident in several Latin American countries, including Mexico, Colombia and Peru.

By age 20, at least 80 percent of teens are sexually experienced in sub-Saharan Africa, as are at least half of all teens in Latin America. In most of Asia, data on the sexual behaviour of unmarried teens are still not collected. In some developed countries, 75 percent or more of teens are sexually experienced by age 20.

In much of sub-Saharan Africa, women's average age at marriage ranges from 18-21 years, compared with 21-23 years in Latin America and 22-25 years in North Africa and Asia. In developed countries, women's average age at marriage ranges from 22 years in Eastern Europe to 26 years in Northern and Western Europe.

Approximately 15 million young women ages 15-19 give birth every year, accounting for more than 10 percent of all births worldwide. In the least developed countries, teens account for 17 percent of all births.

In recent years, the proportion of teen births occurring outside of marriage has risen 26 percent in Botswana and nearly 70 percent in Kenya. In the United States, the proportion of teen births occurring outside of marriage has risen 50 percent since 1980.

Listening to Smaller Voices: Children in an Environment of Change

There was a time when children were preferably seen and not heard. If this report has any real impact on the way in which development programmes are planned and implemented, then that era has just ended. It is based on two years of detailed research and case studies conducted and compiled by ActionAid staff in Nepal and other countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America. The report argues that children must be recognised for the important role they play as active participants in the development process and that the needs of children, particularly girls, should be understood and considered in all development planning. The report offers six practical steps to improve the quality of life for children and stresses the importance of integrating child-focused analyses and gender perspectives within the overall understanding of any given society.

BERNARD VAN LEER FOUNDATION

Salih Booker, 1995. We Are Your Children: The Kushanda Early Childhood and Care Dissemination Programme, Zimbabwe 1985-1993.

The Kushanda Project took its name from the Shona expression Kushandisa zviripo, which means 'what is there' or 'to make what is there work' - a phrase that captures the Project's spirit of self-reliance. It also underlines the fact that, for the children of Zimbabwe's rural majority, early childhood services were only likely to become accessible if their parents learned how to use the material and human resources available in the immediate environment to make community-based pre-schools a reality.

Jimi Jolley, 1995. Developmentally Appropriate Outdoor Play Environments for Infants and Toddlers.

This guide starts by stressing the need for safe and stimulating outdoor environments for all children, making the point that this is a neglected yet vitally important area. It goes on to consider children's different development levels, the needs that arise from these and the ways in which outdoor play facilities can respond to them.

Martin Woodhead. In Search of the Rainbow: Pathways to Quality in Large-scale Programmes for Young Disadvantaged Children.

People's perception of "quality" in early childhood programmes can be likened to their perception of a rainbow. Composed as it is of sunshine and rain, it changes with every shift in perspective. Drawing on examples from several countries, the author argues that sensitivity to diversity and to one's own preconceptions should be key elements informing all early childhood work.

Edith Grotberg, 1995. A Guide to Promoting Resilience in Children: Strengthening the Human Spirit. 56p.

Resilience is a universal capacity which allows a person, group or community to prevent, minimise or overcome the damaging effects of adversity. Results from 14 countries that participated in the International Resilience Project show that fewer than half of the adults caring for children promote resilience in them. This guide, based on the findings, will help individuals and programmes to incorporate the promotion of resilience into their work with children.

Why Children Matter: Investing in Early Childhood Care and Development, 1994. 32p.

Children represent the future. Investing in them and their healthy development has benefits for society as a whole, for parents and families and, of course, for the children themselves. In this publication, the Foundation summarises the evidence and makes the arguments for investing in the early years. Examples of approaches being taken from around the world help to explain why investing in early childhood care and development is one of the best ways of building a brighter, better future.

Building on People's Strengths: Early Childhood in Africa, 1994. 72p.

This publication focuses on the context in which Africa's children are growing up. It explains why the early years are important for an individual child, for the family and community, and for society as a whole and it discusses the kinds of outcomes that early childhood development (ECD) programmes should be seeking. It differentiates the many actors on the ECD stage and their respective responsibilities and examines how the costs and effects of ECD programmes can be assessed.

BUILD SOUTH AFRICA

Dave Jackson. Fundraising Made Easy. 38p.

This publication describes in simple, practical terms, how to go about raising funds from companies, foundations and government sources. It is full of tips and examples that will help any organisation to become more successful in raising funds.

The publication does not promise any miracles. Building relationships with funders is a long-term process, founded on trust - and trust does not just happen overnight. But if readers follow the guidelines provided, their skill in raising funds will develop and their ratio of successes to failures will improve.

BUREAU OF MARKET RESEARCH (BMR)

Pat van der Reis, 1995. Aspirations, Values and Marketing Issues among Black Youths in Gauteng. R500,00.

This research study of Black Gauteng youths shows that the extended family living under one roof is ending. The study covered males and females, hostel dwellers and Northern Sotho, Zulu and Xhosa speakers aged 18 to 30. The findings of this study can be divided into eight main aspects, namely interests and leisure pursuits, status symbols, group identity, cultural values and the generation gap, gender issues, influences and role models, attitudes to advertising and marketing, and aspirations and fears for the future.

It found that the extended family system was ending because youths no longer accepted being dictated to by their parents. Other consequences of the extended family system which youngsters found unacceptable were child abuse and the perceived unfair treatment being given to daughters-in-law by parents. There was a general feeling among those interviewed that men and women would become equal. This was because of equal educational opportunities, the blurring of traditional roles and women's liberation. Lobola was viewed differently by men and women. Young men believed lobola had lost its meaning, while young women accepted the custom, believing that 'a man who gets you free won't value you and will leave you'.

COMMONWEALTH YOUTH PROGRAMME (CYP)

Philip Hope, 1995. Youth Health, Analysis and Action. 95p.

The Commonwealth Youth Programme commissioned four young consultants, one from each of the regions, to undertake a review of the health services in Namibia, the Maldives, the British Virgin Islands and Kiribati. The handbook provides a practical approach to analysing health issues from a youth perspective. It offers advice on developing effective programmes and policies relevant to today's young people. Adolescence and early adulthood are critical stages in physical and psychological development. While a nation's youth are often the targets of health policies and programmes, they are rarely involved in developing, implementing and evaluating them. This handbook is an attempt to redress the balance.

DAVID PHILIP PUBLISHERS

Andrew Dawes and David Donald (Eds.), 1994. Childhood and Adversity: Psychological Perspectives from South African Research. 280p. R48,00.

This publication addresses the nature and psychological consequences of adversity as experienced by the majority of South African children. Included are theoretical and research perspectives on a range of important issues such as the developmental implications of economic stress, political violence, malnutrition and other poverty-related illnesses, sexual abuse and racism.

Gill Straker, 1992. Faces in the Revolution: The Psychological Effects of Violence on Township Youth in South Africa. 168p.

In this moving account, the author draws on her experience as a counsellor to a group of black youth who had been driven out of their township by vigilantes. She penetrates beyond the media stereotype of urban black children as a brutalised generation, showing instead the processes that have motivated the leaders, conformists and casualties of the civil war in South Africa's townships.

Pamela Reynolds, 1989. Childhood in Crossroads: Cognition and Society in South Africa. 280p.

This publication documents one year, 1980, in the lives of fourteen 7-year-old Xhosa children in Crossroads, Cape Town.

DEPARTMENT OF WELFARE

Report of the Lund Committee on Child and Family Support, 1996. 148p.

The main grant in the field of child and family care is the State Maintenance Grant. The Committee of the Minister of Welfare and the Provincial Members of the Executive Council (the Welfare MINMEC) was concerned about the future affordability of the State Maintenance Grant and established the Lund Committee on Child and Family Support to investigate the problem.

The Committee made a number of major recommendations, including the introduction of a flat rate child support benefit, continuation of the Care Dependency Grant and the Foster Care Grant, promoting responsible parenting through the reform of the private maintenance system, the development of a strong strategic position by the Department of Welfare on HIV/AIDS, forging practical links between professional welfare staff and social security staff, the development of appropriate reproductive health services and life skills education in schools, bold changes in social work and community development curricula and the encouragement of research in the field of social security, social policy and inequality.

Mammals to Move You.

This is a collection of original artwork painted in watercolours by South African children. Each page represents a letter of the alphabet and depicts the relevant indigenous mammal, eg. A for aardvark, L for lion.

The uniqueness is that the publication encourages literacy in seven South African languages, because beneath L for Lion, the word lion appears also in the other local languages. Furthermore, it's more than a literacy book, it is an eco-relevant publication, a collector's item.

DON NELSON PUBLISHERS

Linda Cilliers, 1995. The A - Z of Careers in South Africa 1995/1996.

This publication is for those individuals, companies and organisations dedicated to the personal and professional development of committed job seekers. It will also serve as a valuable resource for those involved in the education and development and career counselling. Most importantly, it is aimed at South Africa's youth, some of who have been deprived, eager for opportunity and willing to be involved in playing an active role in securing their future. It aims to enable them to maximise their skills and qualifications by assisting them in developing the ability to market themselves to employers - empowering them to ultimately assume powerful positions within leading organisations.

EARLY LEARNING RESOURCE UNIT (ELRU)

RESOURCE BOOKS

This series of resource books has been written for everyone involved in the care of children aged two to six years. These illustrated books may be used in training courses for preschool workers, in parent education programmes or for reference purposes.

How Children Develop and Learn.

This is an introduction to early childhood education. It provides basic information on all aspects of children's development and on how one can help them grow and learn during the very important preschool years (also available in Afrikaans, Southern Sotho and Xhosa).

A Place for Learning.

This publication focuses on how to organise a preschool centre to create a healthy, happy learning environment for young children. It includes planning a stimulating physical environment, the daily time schedule, creating a supportive environment, health and nutrition.

Learning Through Play.

This publication provides detailed information on very important play activities which promote all aspects of development, including creative art activities, make-believe play, outdoor play, playing with blocks and educational toys.

Learning Together.

This publication offers detailed information on children's books and story time, music time, discovery activities and educational trips.

Making It Work

This is a trainer's guide to the resource books. It provides hints on training methods and specific ideas for training sessions based on the ELRU resource books which form the basis of its Level 1 and 2 training.

Learning with Scrap

This publication was compiled in response to a growing need felt by preschool teachers for ideas and patterns for making inexpensive educational toys and equipment for young children. Many of these ideas can also be used by mothers, home visitors, childminders and others who care for young children in their homes or run playgroups for preschool children. It contains 60 carefully selected ideas for making educational toys and preschool equipment.

BABY CARE RESOURCE BOOKS

Babies begin learning as soon as they are born. The ELRU Baby Care Programme is about how one can create a healthy, caring and stimulating learning environment for babies and toddlers up to the age of two years. The series of four handbooks is written in clear, simple English for all those caring for very young children in pre-schools and at home. The handbooks are part of a training course but can be used by parents and for general reference as well.

Handbook 1. Understanding How Babies Develop and Learn.

Describes how children develop physically, socially, emotionally and mentally during the first two years.

Handbook 2. Organising Your Baby Care Centre.

This publication is specifically for those who care for groups of babies in a creche. It deals with general organisation, working with others, the daily routine and creating a stimulating physical environment.

Handbook 3. Playing with Babies.

This publication is about how babies learn through play. It includes physically active play, manipulative play (toys), messy activities, make-believe play, music and words, picture books, discovery and problem-solving activities.

Handbook 4. Caring for Babies.

This publication is about caregiving routines, helping babies learn to communicate, guiding behaviour, nutrition and keeping babies healthy.

Upgrading Preschool Shelters.

This publication has ideas for upgrading preschool shelters using containers. It looks at how to plan indoor and outdoor space and provide three different lay-out plans. It also suggests ways to recycle waste.

Some Options for Community Educare Programmes.

This is an introduction to some programmes which may be less well known than a preschool, educare centre or creche. The options described - playgroups, home visiting, childminding - do not require large amounts of money or registration to get started, but have been shown to have many benefits for young children and their families (also available in Xhosa).

Getting Started as a Community Preschool Motivator (CPM).

Only half a million of an estimated six million children under the age of 5 in South Africa receive any kind of early childhood development services. This guide presents elements of a strategy for CPMs to reach out to more children and their families. CPMs work closely with parents and childcare systems that are already in place to identify the places where support is needed so that the child's right to basic early education, health, safety and nutrition is assured.

School Ready: Child Ready Seminar Publication.

This publication contains summaries of papers presented and discussion groups held at a seminar organised by ELRU. The seminar was aimed to share ideas and experiences concerning the link between the early childhood development and junior primary sectors, to explore an understanding of "school readiness", to gain a better understanding of the influences on success and failure in the early primary school years and to generate proposals to put to those developing curriculum and policy for the reception year.

EARTHSCAN PUBLICATIONS

Roger Hart, 1996. The Children's Community Participation Handbook: Involving Children Aged Four to Fourteen in Sustainable Development of the Environment. 256p.

Children are by far the most committed age group on environmental issues. All over the world, young people are becoming enthusiastically involved in environmental issues, though often these are superficial, distant calls to 'save the earth'.

The author writes with the conviction that all children can play a central and lasting role in sustainable development if their participation is taken seriously and if communities recognise their developing competencies and unique strengths. Throughout, the publication emphasises the importance of genuine participation. Children must be involved in the definition of environmental problems and become representative, critical voices within their communities. Moreover, 'the environment' should go beyond the standard 'green' focus of many education programmes to include such practical areas as the planning of houses and the management of playgrounds.

David Satterthwaite, et. al., 1996. The Environment for Children: Understanding and Acting on the Environmental Hazards that Threaten Children and their Parents. 192p.

Each year, millions of children die of environmental causes and many more suffer serious illness or injury. Children are often the most vulnerable to the condition of their environment - and their health is an index of its quality - but their wellbeing is rarely given priority by governments or aid agencies. Ironically, the problems can be traced back to matters which can be treated straightforwardly and at relatively low cost - poor drinking water or food, or infectious diseases which can be controlled.

This publication gives a multidisciplinary account of the environmental health hazards threatening children and the range of impacts they can have. It also explains what can be done, by communities as well as governments and aid workers, to provide safe and healthy environments for children. It looks at conditions in a range of cities in the developing world, as well as pollutants and other health problems affecting children in the North.

Lloyd Timberlake and Laura Thomas, 1990. When the Bough Breaks: Our Children, Our Environment. 262p.

'Every year, fourteen million children under the age of five die in the developing world, not in a drought and famine year, but in an 'ordinary' year.' The authors state the stark realities of what they describe as the worldwide 'children's crisis.' 'It is as if these deaths have become an acceptable, muted, and natural background noise,' they write, 'amid the louder workings of the world: buying, selling, trading, producing, governing, defending, and the general creation of wealth.'

This publication is designed to shake readers from the stupor of everyday events and to dramatise the extent of the 'children's crisis,' the causes of the crisis, and the oftentimes 'absurdly cheap' remedies that exist. More importantly, it is a call to action; a challenge 'to make the difficult political choices (that are) necessary to sustain human life on earth.'

F. Van Zyl Slabbert, et. al. (Eds.), 1995. Youth in the New South Africa. 447p.

South African youth make up 29% of the population, yet there is no comprehensive youth policy to attend to their needs. The many problems and challenges facing youth in the areas of social and cultural life, education, politics and economics are discussed in this report. In each area underlying principles and policy recommendations are based on the research findings. Finally, the basis for a holistic youth policy and structures for the implementation of policy are proposed.

The report is the outcome of a three-year investigation by the Co-operative Research Programme South African Youth. It combines the results of 45 research reports, which are summarised in an appendix, and the insights of the Steering Committee of the programme. The committee consisted of 18 experts on youth matters, chaired by Dr F Van Zyl Slabbert.

Does South Africa have a "youth crisis" and are its youth a marginalised "lost generation"? How should the most urgent problems facing youth be addressed in policy? These questions are all discussed in the report, resulting in important contributions to the present debate on youth and youth policy. Many demographic, economic, educational and other statistics are supplied, which are also based on a national youth survey undertaken by the programme.

Lee Rocha-Silva, Sylvain de Miranda and Retha Erasmus, 1996. Alcohol, Tobacco and other Drug Use among Black Youth. 148p.

This publication is based on fieldwork and research which identifies various areas of risk, particularly their implications for HIV/AIDS infection. It establishes some baselines for monitoring drug intake among South African youth and suggests ideas to facilitate the development of national, comprehensive and research-based drug-related prevention programmes.

INSTITUTE FOR DEMOCRACY IN SOUTH AFRICA (IDASA)

Youth Routes to the Future: Four Scenarios about Youth in Cape Town. 15p.

This booklet offers a glimpse at four possible future scenarios for youth in Cape Town. The scenarios illustrate how the choices that are made today could impact on the opportunities that will be available to the next generation of young people in the city. Scenarios are stories about the future that aim to help one think critically about the present. The versions of Cape Town in 2005 depicted in this booklet are not predictions of what will happen in the future. Instead, these scenarios are built around certain key issues and trends in the present situation. They seek to draw attention to these critical uncertainties and to illustrate some plausible implications of how these may unfold in the future.

The scenarios were developed by a team of young people in Cape Town over an 8-month period. The team members had never met one another before embarking on this exercise and had no prior knowledge of scenario design. The process of developing the scenarios involved research and discussion around current political, social and economic trends in order to derive an understanding of these dynamics on a global, national and local level. The scenario team also participated in contact with a broad range of organisations where they gathered ideas and experiences from other youth, experts in various fields, individuals who work with youth, strategic planners in the business environment and key leaders and decision-makers.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT (IISD)

Youth Sourcebook on Sustainable Development, 1994. 167p.

This publication came about as a result of the experiences of the young people who organised and worked together during the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) in 1992. Perhaps one of the major legacies of UNCED is the opportunity it provided for people to come together, and to work towards a common goal: the survival of the planet and its present and future inhabitants.

For youth - the common goal was to ensure that UNCED addressed issues that affected them as young people, such as poverty and over-consumption, but overall, youth wanted to have a voice as decisions were being made about their future. Coming together as the youth sector was not easy. One of the most rewarding yet difficult lessons from this experience was learning how to work together. The youth who participated at UNCED came from all kinds of organisations, large and small, from all regions of the world and diverse social, economic and political backgrounds.

Section One of the publication presents issues that are related to sustainable development from a youth perspective. It encourages youth to research more on the particular issues and form their own opinions and perspectives, which in the end may be similar or different than the ones presented here. Section Two is called Youth Working and Organising for Action, focusing on information resources, while Section Three covers directory information on both youth and non-youth organisations working in the areas of sustainable development.

This publication considers the quality and usefulness of existing survey data, including issues related to the use of the Mosley-Chen framework in studying child survival. It is proposed that limiting the health section of large scale sample surveys to a few indicators, and carrying out in-depth studies of smaller samples on specific topics, could be more fruitful. Integrated in-depth studies could also allow for more developing country involvement, and help to strengthen local institutions.

LENNARD PUBLISHING

Martyn Lewis, 1996. Go For It! 576p.

For young people in Britain today the most important choices they have to make are those that shape their lives and their careers after they leave school. An those choices are often dependent on the people and organisations they approach for help and information.

Knowing who can offer the best advice - and how to get in touch with them - can be a time-consuming and difficult process for both youngsters and their parents. This comprehensive publication offers a much-needed shortcut to the vast range of youth opportunities now available in Britain. The contacts on offer range from new challenges for helping character-building to academic and other long-term career opportunities.

Playing to Learn: A Training Manual for Early Childhood Education.

This manual provides field tested methods in early childhood education which emphasise play as a crucial means to learning. It tries to avoid talking about abstract concepts and focuses on concrete suggestions for implementation. It stresses the organisational skills and holistic perspectives of ECD workers. rather than a list of activities to be followed mechanically and it is illustrated throughout with useful diagrams. Each section has some suggestions for participatory exercises to go through with the trainees.

Learning from Innovations: Report of a Consultation on Innovative Approaches in Early Childhood Care and Education, 1996.

This report is a result of an extensive documentation of voluntary sector implementation of child care programmes that has been carried out since 1993 by Project ACCESS of the Mina Swaminathan Research Foundation. The consultation had three objectives, namely to draw the attention of policy-makers to multiple approaches in ECCE, to critically analyse issues related to the development of childcare services and to make recommendations about how insights from these experiences can be incorporated into childcare programmes.

The report offers the insights that emerged from Project ACCESS's documentation and also outlines the discussions in the consultation of the issues that emerged. Among others these included replicability and sustainability, flexibility and responsiveness, cost effectiveness, quality and relevance, participatory training approaches and decentralisation and the involvement of local self-governing organisations. It concludes with the outcomes of the consultation set out in the form of a series of recommendations grouped under three headings, namely quality and evaluating effectiveness, human resource development (training and motivation) and sustainability and replicability.

NICRO

L. Muntingh (Ed.), 1995. Youth Network: A Directory of Organisations in the Western Cape Assisting in Youth Development. 71p.

This publication lists the organisations in Cape Town involved in youth development. It is intended that this will assist in forming a cohesive and supportive network to help young people with the difficult and trying circumstances that they often have to face.

The NICRO Series.

The NICRO Series is a new journal that will be published three times per year. It will focus on topics in NICRO's field of work and the first two editions will focus on community safety and diversion from the criminal justice system. The intention is that the NICRO Series will provide a forum for discussion and give NICRO staff the opportunity to have their work published.

The NICRO Series is part of the Research Department's plan to develop a culture of research in the organisation and to stimulate critical thinking. NICRO performs a wide range of services and is the only welfare organisation in the field of social and criminal justice. This places it in a unique position on policy issues whilst maintaining contact with what is happening on grassroots level. The NICRO Series will provide the opportunity for NICRO staff and other practitioners to document the work they do and provide a critical analysis of policy issues.

NTATAISE

Keeping Healthy in Rural Preschools.

South Africa's young rural children suffer more than any other population group in the country. The best protection for young children's health is through the primary health care network. Yet statistics show that in some rural areas where clinics exist, they handle up to 20 000 people and there are thousands of square kilometres with no clinics at all. This publication contains information on what health care facilities are available for children in various communities, as well as a series of checklists to help adults to see where programmes are effective, and where extra attention is need.

Rachel Hastie, 1997. Disabled Children in a Society at War: A Casebook from Bosnia. 96p.

This casebook analyses the lessons for working with disabled children learned from a radical and ambitious programme initiated by Oxfam at the height of the civil war in Bosnia. It examines three major themes, namely development in conflict - how is it possible to work on long-term social development projects in an unstable society?, disability in conflict - when war politicises disability, how does this affect different groups of disabled people? and the social model of disability in a post-communist society - what happens when the western European approach to disability, which depends on individuals and groups being free to campaign for their rights, is introduced into a State which is still making the transition from the collectivist values of communism?

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

Ilene Cohn and Guy Goodwin-Gill, 1994. Child Soldiers: The Role of Children in Armed Conflict. 228p.

Contemporary wars are not fought on demarcated battlefields, but in the neighbourhoods and villages of ordinary people. Today, there are over 50 unresolved wars around the world, compared with only ten in 1960. Ninety per cent of these are internal, and the overwhelming majority of victims are civilians, not combatants (in contrast to only five per cent in World War I). In the last decade alone, some two million children have died in wars, and six times as many have been made homeless. Related to this is 'the increased participation of children in hostilities, in terms both of numbers and the immediate and direct nature of their involvement'. Child soldiers are broadly defined as children under the age of 18 who are bearing arms, or carrying out other (often dangerous) military activities such as mine-clearance or espionage.

This publication, written on behalf of the Henry Dunant Institute of the Red Cross, examines the phenomenon within the context of International Humanitarian Law and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child. But the authors emphasise that no action can be taken on behalf of any children - and child soldiers are no exception - without a sound understanding of their daily reality. To describe this, they draw on empirical data from El Salvador, Guatemala, the Occupied Territories, Liberia and Sri Lanka, as well as findings from Afghanistan, Mozambique, Somalia and Uganda.

Jill Ritchie and Owen Kinahan. Help Yourself: Fundraising in Southern Africa. 157p.

This publication is an invitation and an encouragement to all those who are engaged in raising money. It will help everyone whether they are first-time fundraisers or veterans of many years. It is important to remember that however lonely it may seem sometimes, fundraising is a group effort, involving the recipients, donors, workers and the general public.

The sort of information on how to raise funds holds good for all sectors whether the readers is running a school bazaar or involving multi-national corporations. The RDP will no doubt influence the world of fundraising and if fundraisers are expecting assistance through the RDP, they will need to do their homework, be accountable and have a vision. Money never just falls out of the sky. The better organised you are, the better are your chances of raising funds successfully.

RÄDDA BARNEN

Thomas Hammarberg, 1993. Making Reality of the Rights of the Child. 26p.

The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child prescribes an attitude to children which is largely absent in today's real world. Children's rights are violated daily. Whether or not the Convention will change reality depends on how it is implemented by governments.

This publication contains an analysis of the norms in the Convention and how it is intended to be implemented. It also includes a section on the experience of the Committee and the reporting procedure.

Children on their Housing, 1996. 20p.

Why are there strong reasons to include the interests of children in any discussion of housing and urban issues? In this booklet, children give their views, which should be of value for local planners and politicians in the interpretation of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Eva Segerstrom, 1995. Focus on Refugee Children. 116p.

Children affected by war, flight and camp life are vulnerable and need assistance. Taking positive action as early as possible to rebuild, restore and strengthen social support systems by mobilising community resources is therefore of great importance in assisting refugee children. To be able to achieve this, training of human resources is needed.

This is a handbook on social and community work for practitioners, applicable from the very earliest warning of an emergency to the operation of a permanent refugee settlement. It provides introductory background to social and community work theory and the second part, the training material, is intended for use in workshop training by refugee field workers, where the participants are volunteers in the refugee community. It is based on experience from Rädda Barnen's work with refugee communities, especially with Afghan and Somali refugees.

Rachel Brett and Margaret McCallin, 1996. Children: The Invisible Soldiers. 257p.

This publication is an updated and expanded edition of the report by the same name, which was commissioned by the United Nations Study on the Impact of Armed Conflict on Children, the Machel Study. The additions include a chapter about the 'global picture' as well as statistics and photographs. This unique report is based on case studies from 26 countries, most of them in situations of internal armed conflict. These case studies were undertaken by local and international non-governmental organisations working in the field as well as governmental and other agencies.

Carl Geran Svedin and Kristina Back, 1996. Children Who Don't Speak Out: About Children Being Used in Child Pornography. 78p.

Ten children who have been sexually abused are interviewed in this unique report, which compares the stories they relate with the facts that have been revealed through confiscated photographs and video tapes.

Therese Blanchet, 1996. Lost Innocence, Stolen Childhoods. 262p.

This publication examines the lives of Bangladeshi children and adolescents between the ages of 8 and 16 years. It exposes the vast discrepancies in the rights they are able to exercise. Distinct conceptualisations of childhood are shown to be critical to the construction of a society characterised by a high degree of class and gender inequality.

Jeremy Seekings, 1993. Heroes or Villains? Youth Politics in the 1980s. 124p.

This publication forms part of a national research project into South African youth. Images of young "comrades" setting up barricades in townships, "necklacing" opponents and burning property, dominated resistance politics in the 1980s. Commentators began referring to a "lost generation" of young people who had joined "the struggle", boycotted and burned their schools and thereby destroyed their future. This publication focuses on the truth behind these stereotypes.

ROUTLEDGE

Olga Nieuwenhuys, 1993. Children's Lifeworlds: Gender, Welfare and Labour in the Developing World. 228p.

The whole subject of work and exploitation within the family or household has been neglected for far too long. It is not that people working on child labour did not recognise its existence. The plain facts are that conducting research in this area is very difficult, and that until very recently the rule of law was not applied generally to the private realm. Indeed, in many societies violence to women and children in the domestic sphere is not only tolerated, but even expected. The Anti-Slavery Society, in a submission to the United Nations in 1984, asserted that parental power can be more absolute than that of an employer or the State, and that the issue of parental power is the most sensitive area in the child-labour field and the most difficult for outsiders to tackle.

This publication is based on field research in a small coastal village in Kerala State, India. It gives an insight into the complexity of any society, however small or poor, and the difficulty of forecasting the impact of development initiatives. There is no doubt that most of the villagers are very poor and therefore vulnerable to misfortune; it appears that most of the fishermen are indebted to the boat owners, some in a condition that borders on bondage, judged by the description of the wage/labour relationship. The publication also dispels any ideas that women, or indeed children, have spare time. The children's time is divided between work and school, with little time for play.

Kids for Hire: A Child's Right to Protection from Commercial Sexual Exploitation, 1996. 40p.

Sexual exploitation of under-age girls and boys is now an issue of global concern. The 1996 World Congress Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children discussed methods of international cooperation. This publication provides the context for this debate and investigates the various parts played by poverty, cultural attitudes, tradition and pure commercial greed, the different sex work experiences of girls and boys and personal stories through a number of case studies.

UNITED NATIONS

Adolescent Reproductive Behaviour: Evidence from Developing Countries. 139p.

Concentrating on data from Africa, Latin America and Asia, this publication discusses differences in adolescent birth rates and teenage fertility due to exposure to sexual intercourse, prevalence of marriage, contraceptive use and abortion. It also contains numerous tables on teenage fertility rates, contraceptive prevalence among women aged 15-19 and maternal mortality.

Challenges for Children and Women in the 1990s: Eastern and Southern Africa in Profile. 157p.

This publication offers emerging trends and issues on the economy, poverty, children's and women's health, nutrition, education, urbanisation and the impact of conflict in Eastern and Southern Africa. Numerous tables present a wealth of information regarding statistics on present problems as well as goals to be achieved by the year 2000.

Child Mortality in Developing Countries. 129p.

Using a well-defined analytical framework and methodology, the researchers present their assessment of trends in child mortality differentials in some developing countries. Detailed case studies on Kenya, Costa Rica, Honduras, Paraguay, Jordan and Thailand facilitate comparison at the regional level.

Children and Transition to Market Economy. 251p.

This publication examines the initial changes in social policies and the establishment of safety nets which have accompanied the transition to the market economy in Central and Eastern Europe. Policy choices in these areas will be tough and painful and measures adopted will tend to cut back on the essential needs of children who are most vulnerable.

Children on the Frontline. 126p.

This publication focuses on the impact of apartheid, destabilisation and warfare on children in southern and South Africa.

Convention on the Rights of the Child: World Campaign for Human Rights. 54p.

This booklet presents the 'Bill of Rights' for children in the 54-article Convention on the Rights of the Child. For human rights activists this work is invaluable to promote this new concept of separate rights for children with the Government accepting responsibility of protecting the child from the power of parents, economic exploitation and social neglect.

How to Weigh and Measure Children. 94p.

This publication provides operational guidance on the content, collection, processing, analysis and reporting of household surveys on the nutritional status of young children using anthropometric growth indicators.

Perspectives on Contemporary Youth. 268p.

This is a multi-disciplinary synthesis, created by social scientists and humanists interested in contemporary knowledge about youth. It is also an inter-cultural synthesis, achieved by scholars who not only come from various countries but also represent extremely different methodological and theoretical orientations.

Positive Deviance in Child Nutrition. 153p.

Positive deviance refers to children who grow and develop well in impoverished environments where most children are victims of malnutrition and chronic illness. These exceptional children are important as examples of successful child care behaviour and community support systems that can be applied when designing policies and programmes aimed at the malnourished. The first half of this publication discusses the relationships between child growth and care-giver-child interactions, mother-child characteristics, and the social support systems in which the interactions arise and are sustained. The second half offers a guide to future research, including goals, solutions to methodological problems, and a pilot project model.

Statistical Chart on Children: Early Child Development and Learning Achievement, 1990.

This chart focuses on selected key measures useful for assessing and establishing major goals for children and development in the 1990s and subsequent monitoring of the follow-up action and development programmes. It contains graphic panels and a table of relevant and available statistics for 168 countries and areas of the world.

Statistical Charts and Indicators on the Situation of Youth. 50p.

Children are at the forefront of global social, economic and political developments. This is a statistical and analytical sourcebook that uses charts and graphs to highlight main aspects and trends in the aforementioned areas from 1970-1990 in 177 countries. The areas covered are population, education and training, economic activity health and childbearing, and households and marital status.

Statistics on Children in UNICEF Assisted Countries, 1992. 285p.

This revised edition contains 137 country profiles including information on regional and child mortality group profiles in terms of child survival and development, nutrition, health, education, demographic and economic indicators.

World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s. 23p.

This publication contains the complete Declaration and Plan of Action adopted by the 73 Heads of State and Ministers during the Summit. The Declaration sets out the challenges that the political leaders must face and describes their task, their commitment and the next steps to be taken. The Plan of Action provides a guide for the formulation of programmes of action for ensuring the implementation of the Declaration of the Summit, as well as specific actions and goals for child survival, protection and development.

The World Summit for Children. 44p.

This report sets out the most obvious, specific and universal challenges and opportunities now available for protecting the lives of the world's children in the next decade, especially in the fields of health and education. It also looks briefly at wider issues of the debt crisis and the resumption of economic development - which are inseparable from the question of improving the lives of the world's children.

Child Mortality since the 1960s: A Database for Developing Countries. 400p.

This publication brings together the available data on child mortality in developing countries, covering a period from the early 1960s to the present. The purpose is to inform policy makers, programme planners and researchers of the availability of data and to demonstrate their range of variation, in order to provide a basis for assessing levels and trends and for monitoring progress towards mortality reduction.

UNITED NATION'S CHILDREN'S FUND (UNICEF)

The State of the World's Children 1997.

Children's rights are the foundation on which better societies can be built, and a detailed blueprint exists in the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The State of the World's Children 1997 report explores some of the implications of this ground-breaking treaty for children - now on the verge of becoming the first universal law - with a particular focus on the moving subject of child labour. Just as no child should die of preventable illnesses, the report argues no child should labour in hazardous and exploitative conditions.

While it is impossible to cite a single authoritative figure, it is clear that the number of child workers worldwide runs into hundreds of millions, many of them toiling in largely unseen tasks. Although some of their work promotes or enhances their development, without interfering with schooling, recreation and rest, much of it is palpably destructive. Poor children face such hazards, the report says, because they are exploited.

The problem is complex, but there are a vast range of ideas and a large and growing body of experience on how to break the cycle of child labour and poverty. Relevant education and stronger social partnerships to ease the effects of poverty are among the strategies examined. The report also suggests steps to eliminate child labour, always taking into account the best interests of the child.

The State of the World's Children 1996.

Founded in the aftermath of World War II, UNICEF's original mission was to alleviate the suffering of children in wars. Fifty year's later, children's lives are still being shattered by conflict. The State of the World's Children 1996 is a special anniversary edition. It sets out an Anti-War Agenda - a series of realistic and practical steps the world can take to redress the shocking violence against children.

War has taken a terrible toll on children. In the past decade, some two million have been killed, 4-5 million disabled, 12 million left homeless, more than 1 million orphaned or separated from their parents and some 10 million psychologically traumatised. The report also says more children are being recruited as fighting soldiers. In 1988 alone, they numbered as many as 20 000.

In times of war, even children who remain "civilians" are subjected to horrific experiences. Girls face the prospect of sexual violence. Wars have also been adding to the huge numbers of uprooted people. Around 53 million people have been forced into flight, either displaced within their own countries, or as refugees seeking protection elsewhere. At least half are children.

There are also other causes of death. The report says during conflicts, around 20 times more people die from lack of food and medical services, combined with the stress of flight, than from weapons. A further tragedy of war haunts children even when conflict ends, the ever-present threat of anti-personnel landmines. It argues that respect for children and commitment to their welfare are key to humanitarian and political progress. In this regard it sets out an Anti-War Agenda for action.

State of the World's Children 1995, 1995.

The publication argues that the time has come to see the issue of protecting and investing in the growing minds and bodies of children not as a matter of peripheral concern, to be dealt with by a little extra sympathy and charity, but as an issue which is integral to economic and social development. Following the 1990 World Summit for Children, an important beginning has been made.

The Summit set specific goals, to be achieved by the year 2000, for the reduction of malnutrition, preventable disease, and illiteracy. It was subsequently agreed that several of these goals could and should be achieved by the end of 1995. The State of the World's Children 1995 asks what practical progress has been made.

Overall, it finds that a majority of the goals set for 1995 are likely to be met by a majority of the developing nations. Malnutrition has been reduced, immunisation levels are being maintained or increased, large areas of the developing world have become free of polio, iodine and vitamin A deficiency are being eliminated, ORT is preventing more than a million child deaths a year, and progress in primary education is being resumed.

Graca Machel, 1996. Impact of Armed Conflict on Children.

This report recognises the desperate needs of the growing numbers of internationally-displaced people and it recommends that UNICEF provide leadership for the protection and care of internally displaced children in each conflict situation. It also calls for a global campaign to stop the recruitment of children under the age of 18 into armed forces and to ensure that all forces demobilise their under-18 soldiers immediately. It urges all countries to support the speedy adoption of the draft optional protocol to the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Poverty, Children and Policy: Responses for a Brighter Future.

This report is the third in a series published by UNICEF which monitors public policy and social conditions in Eastern Europe and proposes a series of policy guidelines for "a transition with a human face." The series makes suggestions for macroeconomic policy, privatisation leading to widespread shareholding and efficient markets, the promotion of an employment and self-employment based anti-poverty strategy and a number of important measures in health, education and child care.

ZED BOOKS

Jo Boyden and Pat Holden, 1991. Children of the Cities. 152p.

In forty years more than half of the world's population will be urban, with the urban young soon to constitute a majority worldwide. The city has always represented civilisation, youthful dreams and modernity, but now it has begun to represent corruption, decadence, crime, prostitution and drugs. The services and resources concentrated in the city no longer guarantee child welfare.

This publication presents evidence of urban conditions of the young from a wide range of countries. It examines issues such as growing up urban (and poor), growing up with a family (sometimes abused), cities against the young, growing up alone and homeless, the child's health, the child at school and the child at work. It also discusses trends in social planning and how they will affect the young and it suggests policies that would benefit the young.

THE YOUTH BOOK

LIST OF KEY PERFORMANCE INDICATORS FOR MONITORING PROGRESS TOWARDS THE GOALS FOR CHILDREN AND DEVELOPMENT WITHIN THE RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME FRAMEWORK

This lists several indicators for monitoring child and human development. They are listed by both their short names and their more extensive definitions or descriptions. The short name is in bold italics, and is accompanied by the more extensive indicator definition or description.

The indicators are grouped under the goal to which they primarily belong; the goal appears in bold typeface.

The list is divided into the following three sections:

- The first covers the main RDP Goals for Children for the year 2000;
- The second covers specific sectoral supporting Goals;
- The third and final section includes other indicators of relevance to the RDP.

MAIN RDP GOALS FOR CHILDREN AND DEVELOPMENT, 1995 - 2000

1. GOAL

Between 1995 and the year 2000, reduction of infant and under-five child mortality rate by one-third or to 50 to 70 per cent 1 000 live births respectively, whichever is less.

Under-five mortality rate
Probability of dying between birth and exactly five years of age, multiplied by 1 000.

Infant mortality rate
Annual number of deaths of infants under one year of age per 1 000 births. More specifically this is the probability of dying between birth and exactly one year of age, multiplied by 1 000.

2. GOAL

Between 1995 and the year 2000, reduction of maternal mortality rate by half

Maternal mortality rate
Annual number of deaths of women from pregnancy related causes, when pregnant or within 42 days of termination of pregnancy, per 100 000 live births.

3. GOAL

Between 1995 and the year 2000, reduction of severe and moderate malnutrition among under five children by half.

Underweight - moderate and severe
Percentage of under-fives who fall below minus 2 standard deviations from median weight for age of NCHS/WHO reference population.

Underweight - severe
Percentage of under-fives who fall below minus 3 standard deviations from median weight for age of NCHS/WHO reference population.

Stunting - moderate and severe
Percentage of under-fives who fall below minus 2 standard deviations from median height for age of NCHS/WHO reference population.

Stunting - severe
Percentage of under-fives who fall below minus 3 standard deviations from median height for age of NCHS/WHO reference population.

Wasting - moderate and severe
Percentage of children under five years of age who fall below minus 2 standard deviations from median weight for height of NCHS/WHO reference population.

Wasting - severe
Percentage of children under five years of age who fall below minus 3 standard deviations from median weight for height of NCHS/WHO reference population.

4. GOAL

Universal access to safe drinking water and sanitary means of excreta disposal by 2000.

Access to safe drinking water
Percentage of population with access to an adequate amount of safe drinking water located within a convenient distance from the user's dwelling.

Access to sanitary excreta disposal
Percentage of population with access to a sanitary facility for human excreta disposal in the dwelling or located within a convenient distance from the user's dwelling.

5. GOAL

Universal access to basic education, and achievement of primary education by at least 80 per cent of primary school-age children through formal schooling or non-formal education of comparable learning standard, with emphasis on reducing the current disparities between boys and girls.

Learning achievement
Percentage of children aged 10 to 12 reaching a specific level of learning achievement in literacy, numeracy and life skills.

6. GOAL

Reduction of the adult illiteracy rate (the appropriate age group to be determined in each country) to at least half its 1995 level, with emphasis on female literacy.

Adult literacy rate
Percentage of population aged 15 years and older who are able, with understanding, to both read and write a short simple statement on their everyday life.

7. GOAL

Provide improved protection of children in especially difficult circumstances and tackle the root causes leading to such situations.

- Indicators still to be developed.

8. GOAL:
Ratification of the Children's Rights Convention by the end of 1995.

CRC ratified 16 June 1995.

SPECIFIC SUPPORTING SECTORAL GOALS: HEALTH AND NUTRITION

9. GOAL

Evaluation of Immunisation coverage of six antigens of the Expanded Programme on Immunisation to 80 per cent or more by 1995.

DPT immunisation
Percentage of children immunised against diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus (DPT3) before their first birthday.

Measles immunisation
Percentage of children immunised against measles before their first birthday.

Polio immunisation
Percentage of children immunised against poliomyelitis (OPV3) before their first birthday.

Tuberculosis immunisation
Percentage of children immunised against tuberculosis before their first birthday.

Pregnant women immunised against tetanus
Percentage of pregnant women immunised against tetanus.

Children protected against neonatal tetanus
Percentage of children protected against neonatal tetanus through immunisation of their mother.

10. GOAL

Maintenance of a high level of immunisation coverage (at least 90 per cent of children under one year of age by the year 2000) against diphtheria, pertussis, tetanus, measles, poliomyelitis, tuberculosis and against tetanus for women of child-bearing age.

- Indicators as above.

11. GOAL

Elimination of neonatal tetanus by 2000.

Neonatal tetanus cases
Annual number of cases of neonatal tetanus.

Districts reporting neonatal tetanus cases
Percentage of districts reporting neonatal tetanus cases (including districts reporting zero cases).

12. GOAL

Reduction by 95 per cent in measles deaths and reduction by 90 per cent of measles cases compared to pre-immunisation levels by 2000, as a major step to the global eradication of measles in the longer run.

Under-five deaths from measles
Annual number of under-five deaths due to measles.
Measles cases
Annual number of cases of measles.

13. GOAL

Elimination of polio by 2000.

Polio cases
Annual number of cases of polio.

Districts reporting polio cases
Percentage of districts reporting polio cases (including districts reporting zero cases).

14. GOAL

Special attention to the health and nutrition of the female child and to pregnant and lactating women.

Underweight - moderate and severe
Percentage of females under-five who fall below minus 2 standard deviations from median weight for age of NCHS/WHO reference population.

Underweight - severe
Percentage of females under-five who fall below minus 3 standard deviations from median weight for age of NCHS/WHO reference population.

Stunting - moderate and severe
Percentage of females under-five who fall below minus 2 standard deviations from median height for age of NCHS/WHO reference population.

Stunting - severe
Percentage of females under-five who fall below minus 3 standard deviations from median height for age of NCHS/WHO reference population.

Wasting - moderate and severe
Percentage of females under five years of ago who fall below minus 3 standard deviations from median weight for height of NCHS/WHO reference population.

Hospitals and maternity facilities in country
Total number of hospitals and maternity facilities in country.

Care of pregnant women
Percentage of women attended at least once during pregnancy by trained health personnel.

Childbirth care
Percentage of births attended by appropriately trained health personnel.

Obstetric care
Number of facilities providing essential obstetric care per 500 000 population.

Population in absolute poverty
Percentage of population having an income level which is insufficient to provide a minimum nutritionally adequate diet plus essential non-food requirements.

Other indicators for children disaggregated by gender.

15. GOAL

Reduction by 50 per cent in the deaths due to diarrhoea in children under the age of five years and 25 per cent reduction in the diarrhoea incidence rate.

Under-five deaths
Annual number of deaths of children under five years of age due to diarrhoea.

Diarrhoea episodes per child
Average annual number of episodes of diarrhoea per child under five years of age.

16. GOAL

Reduction by one third in the deaths due to acute respiratory infections in children under five years.

Under-five deaths from acute respiratory infections
Annual number of deaths of children under five years of age due to acute respiratory infections.

17. GOAL

Access by all pregnant women to pre-natal care, trained attendants during childbirth and referral facilities for high-risk pregnancies and obstetric emergencies.

Care of pregnant women
Percentage of women attended at least once during pregnancy by trained health personnel.

Childbirth care
Percentage of births attended by appropriately trained health personnel.

Obstetric care
Number of facilities providing essential obstetric care per 500 000 population.

18. GOAL

Virtual elimination of vitamin A deficiency by 2000. (At least 80 per cent of all children under 24 months of age in areas with vitamin A deficiency receive adequate vitamin A).

Children receiving adequate vitamin A
Percentage of children under 24 months of age receiving adequate vitamin A (in vitamin deficient areas).

19. GOAL

Universal iodisation of salt in IDD-affected countries by 2000.

Iodised salt consumption entire country
Percentage of households consuming adequately iodised salt according to agreed criteria - in the entire country.

20. GOAL

Achievement of 80 per cent usage of ORT (increased fluids) and continued feeding as part of the programme to control diarrhoeal diseases.

Use of ORT - pre-1993 definition
Percentage of diarrhoea episodes in under-fives treated with oral rehydration salts (ORS) and/or recommended home fluids (pre-1993 ORT definition).

Use of ORT increased fluids and feeding
Percentage of diarrhoea episodes in under-fives treated with ORT (increased fluids) and continued feeding.

Access to ORS
Percentage of population that has a regular supply of ORS available in their community.

21. GOAL

Ending and preventing free and low-cost supplies of breast milk substitutes in all hospitals and maternity facilities. Having target hospitals and maternity facilities achieve "baby-friendly" status in accordance with Baby Friendly Hospital Initiative (BFHI) global criteria.

Hospitals and maternity facilities in country
Total number of hospitals and maternity facilities in country.

Hospitals and maternity facilities targeted for BFHI
Number of hospitals and maternity facilities targeted for BFHI by end of 1995.

Hospitals and maternity facilities designated "baby-friendly"
Number of hospitals and maternity facilities that have been officially designated as "baby-friendly" in accordance with global criteria.

22. GOAL

Empowerment of all women to breast-feed their children exclusively for four to six months and to continue breast-feeding, with complementary food, well into the second year.

Exclusive breast feeding rate - less than 4 months
Percentage of infants less than 4 months (120 days) of age who are exclusively breastfed.

Timely complementary feeding rate - 6 to 9 months
Percentage of infants 6 to 9 months (180 to 299 days) of age who are receiving breast milk and complementary food.

Continued breast feeding rate at two years
Percentage of children 20 to 23 months of ago who are breast feeding.

23. GOAL

Growth promotion and its regular monitoring to be institutionalised by the year 2000.

- Indicators still to be developed.

24. GOAL

Dissemination of knowledge and supporting services to increase food production to ensure household food security.

- Indicators still to be developed.

25. GOAL

Reduction of the rate of low birth weight (less than 2,5 kg) to less than 10 per cent by the year 2000.

Low birth weight
Percentage of live births that weight below 2 500 grams.

26. GOAL

Reduction of iron deficiency anaemia in women by one third of the 1990 levels.

Females with low haemoglobin
Percentage of women aged 15 to 49 years with haemoglobin levels below 12 grams/dl blood for non-pregnant women, and below 11 grams/dl blood for pregnant women.

27. GOAL

Virtual elimination of iodine deficiency disorders.

Goitre in school children
Percentage of children aged 6 to 11 years with goitre of any grade (palpable and visible combined).

Low urinary iodine
Percentage of population (school age children or general population) in iodine deficient areas with urinary iodine levels below 10 micrograms/dl of urine.

28. GOAL

Virtual elimination of vitamin A deficiency and its consequences, including blindness.

Children with night-blindness
Percentage of children 2 to 6 years of age with night-blindness.

Low vitamin A
Percentage of children 6 months to 6 years of age with serum vitamin A below 20 micrograms/dl.

Breast milk low in Vitamin A
Percentage of lactating women with breast milk vitamin A below 30 micrograms/dl (or less than 8 micrograms vitamin A per gram of milk fat).

SPECIFIC SUPPORTING SECTORAL GOALS: BASIC EDUCATION

29. GOAL

Strengthen Basic Education so as to achieve by 2000 reduction by one-third of the gap between: (a) primary school enrolment and retention rates in 1995 and universal enrolment and retention in primary education of at least 80 per cent of school-age children, and (b) primary school enrolment and retention rates of boys and girls in 1995.

Children reaching grade 5
Percentage of children entering first grade of primary school who eventually reach grade 5.

Net primary school enrolment ratio
Number of children enrolled in primary school who belong in the relevant age group, expressed as a percentage of the total number in that age group (net enrolment).

Entering grade 1 at recommended age
Percentage of children of primary school entry age who enter grade 1 at that age.

Gross primary school enrolment ratio
Number of children enrolled in primary school expressed as a percentage of the total number of children of primary school age (gross enrolment).

30. GOAL

Access by all couples to information and services to prevent pregnancies that are too early, too closely spaced, too late or too many.

Contraceptive prevalence rate
Percentage of women aged 15 to 49 currently using contraceptive methods (either modern or traditional).

Fertility rate for women 15 to 19
Average number of live births to women aged 15 to 19 years.

STATE OF THE WORLD'S CHILDREN 1997

Summary

The world's approach to children has changed dramatically. When UNICEF was created 50 years ago - on 11 December 1946, in the aftermath of the most devastating war in history - it was out of concern that children would not be adequately protected in the overall relief effort under way in Europe. The international recognition that children required special attention was revolutionary at the time. At the end of the postwar reconstruction period, newly independent developing countries demanded that children's growing minds and bodies be given specific consideration, and UNICEF's relief mandate was enlarged to include child survival and development.

Now, the international approach to children has changed dramatically once again. The idea that children have special needs has given way to the conviction that children have rights, the same full spectrum of rights as adults: civil and political, social, cultural and economic.

This belief was expressed at the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which entered into international law on 2 September 1990, nine months after its adoption by the United Nations General Assembly. The Convention has since been ratified by all countries, except the Cook Islands, Oman, Somalia, Switzerland, the United Arab Emirates and the United States, making it the most widely ratified human rights convention in history. Ninety-six per cent of the world's children live in States that have ratified the Convention and these countries are legally obligated to protect children's rights.

This profound change is already beginning to have an impact. New laws have been passed and existing laws amended in numerous countries to conform to the Convention. In two striking examples of countries inspired by the Convention, Sierra Leone has demobilized child soldiers, and in Rwanda, children held in adult detention centres for alleged war offenses are being moved to special juvenile institutions, with UNICEF's assistance. Major initiatives such as the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, held in Stockholm in August 1996, and the International Conference on Child Labour, scheduled for October 1997 on Oslo, derive their impetus from the Convention.

UNICEF itself is at a turning-point. In its 50th year, the organization has adopted a mission statement that makes the Convention its guiding force. It will continue to work to alleviate the worst aspects of poverty for the world's children - as more than 12,5 million children under five in developing countries continue to die each year, 9 million of them from causes for which inexpensive solutions have been routinely applied in the industrialized world for half a century. UNICEF will specifically pursue the year 2000 goals established at the World Summit for Children in 1990. Action towards achieving these goals has already saved the lives of millions of children.

By expressing and protecting all the rights of children, the Convention throws a clear shaft of light on paths that extend beyond the year 2000. Some of these involve protecting children and youth in conflict with the criminal justice system. Others aim to ensure the development of the young child, to support families, to end the use of land-mines and to try to bring about a more equitable distribution of resources.

The most vulnerable children in all societies, rich and poor, must have first call on resources and efforts. The attempt to touch their lives will be complex and will require a sustained attack on the root causes of poverty and underdevelopment. In a world where technology and knowledge are available and easy to share, and per capita income has tripled in the past quarter of a century, there can be no excuses: the rights of all children, including those who are most disadvantaged, can be guaranteed.

Good intentions will now have to be matched with political will. Redirecting just one quarter of the developing world's military expenditure, for example, could provide enough additional resources to reach most of the goals for the year 2000. A similar shift in the targeting of development aid to basic social services - using 20 per cent of official development assistance - could generate much of the rest.

This kind of shift in the way the world uses its resources is no longer an appeal to the charity of those with the power and the purse-strings, but a matter of rights and obligations. Yet the new era in child rights will still need underpinning by popular pressure.

For the past 15 years, The State of the World's Children report has mobilized public and political support for child survival and development. Unfortunately, the need for passionate advocacy on behalf of the world's children has not diminished, even now, half a century after the need for UNICEF was internationally acknowledged. As Philip Alston, a leading child rights lawyer and activist, states: "In the final analysis, appropriate policies will be adopted ... only in response to widespread and insistent public outrage."

UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION ON THE RIGHTS OF THE CHILD

PREAMBLE

The States Parties to the present Convention,

Considering that, in accordance with the principles proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Bearing in mind that the peoples of the United Nations have, in the Charter, reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights and in the dignity and worth of the human person, and have determined to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Recognizing that the United Nations has, in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in the International Covenants on Human Rights, proclaimed and agreed that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth therein, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Recalling that, in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the United Nations has proclaimed that childhood is entitled to special care and assistance,

Convinced that the family, as the fundamental group of society and the natural environment for the growth and well-being of all its members and particularly children, should be afforded the necessary protection and assistance so that it can fully assume its responsibilities within the community,

Recognizing that the child, for the full and harmonious development of his or her personality, should grow up in a family environment, in an atmosphere of happiness, love and understanding,

Considering that the child should be fully prepared to live an individual life in society, and brought up in the spirit of the ideals proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, and in particular in the spirit of peace, dignity, tolerance, freedom, equality and solidarity,

Bearing in mind that the need to extend particular care to the child has been stated in the Geneva Declaration of the Rights of the Child of 1924 and in the Declaration of the Rights of the Child adopted by the General Assembly on 20 November 1959 and recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (in particular in articles 23 and 24), in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (in particular in article 10) and in the statutes and relevant instruments of specialized agencies and international organizations concerned with the welfare of children,

Bearing in mind that, as indicated in the Declaration of the Rights of the Child, "the child, by reason of his physical and mental immaturity, needs special safeguards and care, including appropriate legal protection, before as well as after birth",

Recalling the provisions of the Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placements and Adoption Nationally and Internationally; the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules); and the Declaration on the Protection of Women and Children in Emergency and Armed Conflict,

Recognizing that, in all countries in the world, there are children living in exceptionally difficult conditions, and that such children need special consideration,

Taking due account of the importance of the traditions and cultural values of each people for the protection and harmonious development of the child,

Recognizing the importance of international co-operation for improving the living conditions of children in every country, in particular in the developing countries, have agreed as follows:

PART 1

ARTICLE 1

For the purposes of the present Convention, a child means every human being below the age of 18 years unless, under the law applicable to the child, majority is attained earlier.

ARTICLE 2

1. States Parties shall respect and ensure the rights set forth in the present Convention to each child within their jurisdiction without discrimination of any kind, irrespective of the child's or his or her parent's or legal guardian's race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, property, disability, birth or other status.

2. States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to ensure that the child is protected against all forms of discrimination or punishment on the basis of the status, activities, expressed opinions, or beliefs of the child's parents, legal guardians, or family members.

ARTICLE 3

1. In all actions concerning children, whether undertaken by public or private social welfare institutions, courts of law, administrative authorities or legislative bodies, the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration.

2. States Parties undertake to ensure the child such protection and care as is necessary for his or her well-being, taking into account the rights and duties of his or her parents, legal guardians, or other individuals legally responsible for him or her, and, to this end, shall take all appropriate legislative and administrative measures.

3. States Parties shall ensure that the institutions, services and facilities responsible for the care or protection of children shall conform with the standards established by competent authorities, particularly in the areas of safety, health, in the number and suitability of their staff, as well as competent supervision.

ARTICLE 4

States Parties shall undertake all appropriate legislative, administrative, and other measures for the implementation of the rights recognized in the present Convention. With regard to economic, social and cultural rights, States Parties shall undertake such measures to the maximum extent of their available resources and, where needed, within the framework of international co-operation.

ARTICLE 5

States Parties shall respect the responsibilities, rights and duties of parents or, where applicable, the members of the extended family or community as provided for by local custom, legal guardians or other persons legally responsible for the child, to provide, in a manner consistent with the evolving capacities of the child, appropriate direction and guidance in the exercise by the child of the rights recognized in the present Convention.

ARTICLE 6

1. States Parties recognize that every child has the inherent right to life.

2. States Parties shall ensure to the maximum extent possible the survival and development of the child.

ARTICLE 7

1. The child shall be registered immediately after birth and shall have the right from birth to a name, the right to acquire a nationality and, as far as possible, the right to know and be cared for by his or her parents.

2. States Parties shall ensure the implementation of these rights in accordance with their national law and their obligations under the relevant international instruments in the field, in particular where the child would otherwise be stateless.

ARTICLE 8

1. States Parties undertake to respect the right of the child to preserve his or her identity, including nationality, name and family relations as recognized by law without unlawful interference.

2. Where a child is illegally deprived of some or all of the elements of his or her identity, States Parties shall provide appropriate assistance and protection, with a view to speedily re-establishing his or her identity.

ARTICLE 9

1. States Parties shall ensure that a child shall not be separated from his or her parents against their will, except when competent authorities subject to judicial review determine, in accordance with applicable law and procedures, that such separation is necessary for the best interests of the child. Such determination may be necessary in a particular case such as one involving abuse or neglect of the child by the parents, or one where the parents are living separately and a decision must be made as to the child's place of residence.

2. In any proceedings pursuant to paragraph 1 of the present article, all interested parties shall be given an opportunity to participate in the proceedings and make their views known.

3. States Parties shall respect the right of the child who is separated from one or both parents to maintain personal relations and direct contact with both parents on a regular basis, except if it is contrary to the child's best interests.

4. Where such separation results from any action initiated by a State party, such as the detention, imprisonment, exile, deportation or death (including death arising from any cause while the person is in the custody of the State) of one or both parents or of the child, that State Party shall, upon request, provide the parents, the child or, if appropriate, another member of the family with the essential information concerning the whereabouts of the absent member(s) of the family unless the provision of the information would be detrimental to the well-being of the child. States Parties shall of itself entail no adverse consequences for the person(s) concerned.

ARTICLE 10

1. In accordance with the obligation of States Parties under article 9, paragraph 1, applications by a child or his or her parents to enter or leave a State Party for the purpose of family reunification shall be dealt with by States Parties in a positive, humane and expeditious manner. States Parties shall further ensure that the submission of such a request shall entail no adverse consequences for the applicants and for the members of their family.

2. A child whose parents reside in different States shall have the right to maintain on a regular basis, save in exceptional circumstances personal relations and direct contacts with both parents. Towards that end and in accordance with the obligation of States Parties under article 9, paragraph 1, States Parties shall respect the right of the child land his or her parents to leave any country, including their own, and to enter their own country. The right to leave any country shall be subject only to such restrictions as are prescribed by law and which are necessary to protect the national security, public order (ordre public), public health or morals or the rights and freedoms of others and are consistent with the other rights recognized in the present Convention.

ARTICLE 11

1. States Parties shall take measures to combat the illicit transfer and non-return of children abroad.

2. To this end, States Parties shall promote the conclusion of bilateral or multilateral agreements or accession to existing agreements.

ARTICLE 12

1. States Parties shall assure to the child who is capable of forming his or her own views the right to express those views freely in all matters affecting the child, the views of the child being given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child.

2. For this purpose, the child shall in particular be provided the opportunity to be heard in any judicial and administrative proceedings affecting the child, either directly, or through a representative or an appropriate body, in a manner consistent with the procedural rules of national law.

ARTICLE 13

1. The child shall have the right to freedom of expression; this right shall include freedom to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds, regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art, or through any other media of the child's choice.

2. The exercise of this right may be subject to certain restrictions, but these shall only be such as are provided by law and are necessary:
(a) For respect of the rights or reputations of others; or
(b) For the protection of national security or of public order (ordre public), or of public health or morals.

ARTICLE 14

1. States Parties shall respect the right of the child to freedom of thought, conscience and religion.

2. States Parties shall respect the rights and duties of the parents and, when applicable, legal guardians, to provide direction to the child in the exercise of his or her right in a manner consistent with the evolving capacities of the child.

3. Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs may be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals, or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.

ARTICLE 15

1. States Parties recognize the rights of the child to freedom of association and to freedom of peaceful assembly.

2. No restrictions may be placed on the exercise of these rights other than those imposed in conformity with the law and which are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, public order (ordre public), the protection of public health or morals or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

ARTICLE 16

1. No child shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his or her privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to unlawful attacks on his or her honour and reputation.

2. The child has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.

ARTICLE 17

States Parties recognize the important function performed by the mass media and shall ensure that the child has access to information and material from a diversity of national and international sources, especially those aimed at the promotion of his or her social, spiritual and moral well-being and physical and mental health. To this end, States Parties shall:
(a) Encourage the mass media to disseminate information and material of social and cultural benefit to the child and in accordance with the spirit of article 29;
(b) Encourage international co-operation in the production, exchange and dissemination of such information and material from a diversity of cultural, national and international sources;
(c) Encourage the production and dissemination of children's books;
(d) Encourage the mass media to have particular regard to the linguistic needs of the child who belongs to a minority group or who is indigenous;
(e) Encourage the development of appropriate guidelines for the protection of the child from information and material injurious to his or her well-being, bearing in mind the provisions of articles 13 and 18.

ARTICLE 18

1. States Parties shall use their best efforts to ensure recognition of the principle that both parents have common responsibilities for the upbringing and development of the child. Parents or, as the case may be, legal guardians, have the primary responsibility for the upbringing and development of the child. The best interests of the child will be their basic concern.

2. For the purpose of guaranteeing and promoting the rights set forth in the present Convention, States Parties shall render appropriate assistance to parents and legal guardians in the performance of their child-rearing responsibilities and shall ensure the development of institutions, facilities and services for the care of children.

3. States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to ensure that children of working parents have the right to benefit from child-care services and facilities for which they are eligible.

ARTICLE 19

1. States Parties shall take all appropriate legislative, administrative, social and educational measures to protect the child from all forms of physical or mental violence, injury or abuse, neglect or negligent treatment, maltreatment or exploitation, including sexual abuse, while in the care of parent(s), legal guardian(s) or any other person who has the care of the child.

2. Such protective measures should, as appropriate, include effective procedures for the establishment of social programmes to provide necessary support for the child and for those who have the care of the child, as well as for other forms of prevention and for identification, reporting, referral, investigation, treatment and follow-up of instances of child maltreatment described heretofore, and, as appropriate, for judicial involvement.

ARTICLE 20

1. A child temporarily or permanently deprived of his or her family environment, or in whose own best interests cannot be allowed to remain in that environment, shall be entitled to special protection and assistance provided by the State.

2. States Parties shall in accordance with their national laws ensure alternative care for such a child.

3. Such care could include, inter alia, foster placement, kafala of Islamic law, adoption or if necessary placement in suitable institutions for the care of children. When considering solutions, due regard shall be paid to the desirability of continuity in a child's upbringing and to the child's ethnic, religious, cultural and linguistic background.

ARTICLE 21

States Parties that recognize and/or permit the system of adoption shall ensure that the best interests of the child shall be the paramount consideration and they shall:

(a) Ensure that the adoption of a child is authorized only by competent authorities who determine, in accordance with applicable law and procedures and on the basis of all pertinent and reliable information, that the adoption is permissible in view of the child's status concerning parents, relatives and legal guardians and that, if required, the persons concerned have given their informed consent to the adoption on the basis of such counselling as may be necessary;

(b) Recognize that inter-country adoption may be considered as an alternative means of child's care, if the child cannot be placed in a foster or an adoptive family or cannot in any suitable manner be cared for in the child's country of origin;

(c) Ensure that the child concerned by inter-country adoption enjoys safeguards and standards equivalent to those existing in the case of national adoption;

(d) Take all appropriate measures to ensure that, in inter-country adoption, the placement does not result in improper financial gain for those involved in it;

(e) Promote, where appropriate, the objectives of the present article by concluding bilateral or multilateral arrangements or agreements, and endeavour, within this framework, to ensure that the placement of the child in another country is carried out by competent authorities or organs.

ARTICLE 22

1. States Parties shall take appropriate measures to ensure that a child who is seeking refugee status or who is considered a refugee in accordance with applicable international or domestic law and procedures shall, whether unaccompanied or accompanied by his or her parents or by any other person, receive appropriate protection and humanitarian assistance in the enjoyment of applicable rights set forth in the present Convention and in other international human rights or humanitarian instruments to which the said States are Parties.

2. For this purpose, States Parties shall provide, as they consider appropriate, co-operation in any efforts by the United Nations and other competent intergovernmental organizations or non-governmental organizations co-operating with the United Nations to protect and assist such a child and to trace the parents or other members of the family of any refugee child in order to obtain information necessary for reunification with his or her family. In cases where no parents or other members of the family can be found, the child shall be accorded the same protection as any other child permanently or temporarily deprived of his or her family, environment for any reason, as set forth in the present Convention.

ARTICLE 23

1. States Parties recognize that a mentally or physically disabled child should enjoy a full and decent life, in conditions which ensure dignity, promote self-reliance and facilitate the child's active participation in the community.

2. States Parties recognize the right of the disabled child to special care and shall encourage and ensure the extension, subject to available resources, to the eligible child and those responsible for his or her care, of assistance for which application is made and which is appropriate to the child's condition and to the circumstances of the parents or others caring for the child.

3. Recognizing the special needs of a disabled child, assistance extended in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article shall be provided free of charge, whenever possible, taking into account the financial resources of the parents or others caring for the child, and shall be designed to ensure that the disabled child has effective access to and receives education, training, health care services, rehabilitation services, preparation for employment and recreation opportunities in a manner conducive to the child's achieving the fullest possible social integration and individual development, including his or her cultural and spiritual development.

4. States Parties shall promote, in the spirit of international co-operation, the exchange of appropriate information in the field of preventive health care and of medical, psychological and functional treatment of disabled children, including dissemination of and access to information concerning methods of rehabilitation, education and vocational services, with the aim of enabling States Parties to improve their capabilities and skills and to widen their experience in these areas. In this regard, particular account shall be taken of the needs of developing countries.

ARTICLE 24

1. States Parties recognize the right of the child to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health and to facilities for the treatment of illness and rehabilitation of health. States Parties shall strive to ensure that no child is deprived of his or her right of access to such health care services.

2. States Parties shall pursue full implementation of this right and, in particular, shall take appropriate measures:
(a) To diminish infant and child mortality;
(b) To ensure the provision of necessary medical assistance and health care to all children with emphasis on the development of primary health care;
(c) To combat disease and malnutrition, including within the framework of primary health care, through, inter alia, the application of readily available technology and through the provision of adequate nutritious foods and clean drinking water, taking into consideration the dangers and risks of environmental pollution;
(d) To ensure appropriate pre-natal and post-natal health care for mothers;
(e) To ensure that all segments of society, in particular parents and children, are informed, have access to education and are supported in the use of basic knowledge of child health and nutrition, the advantages of breast-feeding, hygiene and environmental sanitation and the prevention of accidents;
(f) To develop preventive health care, guidance for parents and family planning education and services.

3. States Parties shall take all effective and appropriate measures with a view to abolishing traditional practices prejudicial to the health of children.

4. States Parties undertake to promote and encourage international co-operation with a view to achieving progressively the full realization of the right recognized in the present article. In this regard, particular account shall be taken of the needs of developing countries.

ARTICLE 25

States Parties recognize the right of a child who has been placed by the competent authorities for the purposes of care, protection or treatment of his or her physical or mental health, to a periodic review of the treatment provided to the child and all other circumstances relevant to his or her placement.

ARTICLE 26

1. States Parties shall recognize for every child the right to benefit from social security, including social insurance, and shall take the necessary measures to achieve the full realization of this right in accordance with their national law.

2. The benefits should, where appropriate, be granted, taking into account the resources and the circumstances of the child and persons having responsibility for the maintenance of the child, as well as any other consideration relevant to an application for benefits made by or on behalf of the child.

ARTICLE 27

1. States Parties recognize the right of every child to a standard of living adequate for the child's physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social development.

2. The parent(s) or others responsible for the child have the primary responsibility to secure, within their abilities and financial capacities, the conditions of living necessary for the child's development.

3. States Parties, in accordance with national conditions and within their means, shall take appropriate measures to assist parents and others responsible for the child to implement this right and shall in case of need provide material assistance and support programmes, particularly with regard to nutrition, clothing and housing.

4. States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to secure the recovery of maintenance for the child from the parents or other persons having financial responsibility for the child, both within the State Party and from abroad. In particular, where the person having financial responsibility for the child lives in a State different from that of the child, States Parties shall promote the accession to international agreements or the conclusion of such agreements, as well as the making of other appropriate arrangements.

ARTICLE 28

1. States Parties recognize the right of the child to education, and with a view to achieving this right progressively and on the basis of equal opportunity, they shall, in particular:
(a) Make primary education compulsory and available free to all;
(b) Encourage the development of different forms of secondary education, including general and vocational education, make them available and accessible to every child, and take appropriate measures such as the introduction of free education and offering financial assistance in case of need;
(c) Make higher education accessible to all on the basis of capacity by every appropriate means;
(d) Make educational and vocational information and guidance available and accessible to all children;
(e) Take measures to encourage regular attendance at schools and the reduction of drop-out rates.

2. States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to ensure that school discipline is administered in a manner consistent with the child's human dignity and in conformity with the present Convention.

3. State Parties shall promote and encourage international co-operation in matters relating to education, in particular with a view to contributing to the elimination of ignorance and illiteracy throughout the world and facilitating access to scientific and technical knowledge and modern teaching methods. In this regard, particular account shall be taken of the needs of developing countries.

ARTICLE 29

1. States Parties agree that the education of the child shall be directed to:

(a) The development of the child's personality, talents and mental and physical abilities to their fullest potential;

(b) The development of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

(c) The development of respect for the child's parents, his or her own cultural identity, language and values, for the national values of the country in which the child is living, the country from which he or she may originate, and for civilizations different from his or her own;

(d) The preparation of the child for responsible life in a free society, in the spirit of understanding, peace, tolerance, equality of sexes, and friendship among all peoples, ethnic, national and religious groups and persons of indigenous origin;

(e) The development of respect for the natural environment.

2. No part of the present article or article 28 shall be construed so as to interfere with the liberty of individuals and bodies to establish and direct educational institutions, subject always to the observance of the principles set forth in paragraph 1 of the present article and to the requirements that the education given in such institutions shall conform to such minimum standards as may be laid down by the State.

ARTICLE 30

In those States in which ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities or persons of indigenous origin exist, a child belonging to such a minority or who is indigenous shall not be denied the right, in community with other members of his or her group, to enjoy his or her own culture, to profess and practise his or her own religion, or to use his or her own language.

ARTICLE 31

1. States Parties recognize the right of the child to rest and leisure, to engage in play and recreational activities appropriate to the age of the child and to participate freely in cultural life and the arts.

2. States Parties shall respect and promote the right of the child to participate fully in cultural and artistic life and shall encourage the provision of appropriate and equal opportunities for cultural, artistic, recreational and leisure activity.

ARTICLE 32

1. States Parties recognize the right of the child to be protected from economic exploitation and from performing any work that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child's education, or to be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development.

2. States Parties shall take legislative, administrative, social and educational measures to ensure the implementation of the present article. To this end, and having regard to the relevant provisions of other international instruments, States Parties shall in particular:

(a) Provide for a minimum age or minimum ages for admission to employment;

(b) Provide for appropriate regulation of the hours and conditions of employment;

(c) Provide for appropriate penalties or other sanctions to ensure the effective enforcement of the present article.

ARTICLE 33

States Parties shall take all appropriate measures, including legislative, administrative, social and educational measures, to protect children from the illicit use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances as defined in the relevant international treaties, and to prevent the use of children in the illicit production and trafficking of such substances.

ARTICLE 34

States Parties undertake to protect the child from all forms of sexual exploitation and sexual abuse. For these purposes, States Parties shall in particular take all appropriate national, bilateral and multilateral measures to prevent:

(a) The inducement or coercion of a child to engage in any unlawful sexual activity;

(b) The exploitative use of children in prostitution or other unlawful sexual practices;

(c) The exploitative use of children in pornographic performances and materials.

ARTICLE 35

States Parties shall take all appropriate national, bilateral and multilateral measures to prevent the abduction of, the sale of or traffic in children for any purpose or in any form.

ARTICLE 36

States Parties shall protect the child against all other forms of exploitation prejudicial to any aspects of the child's welfare.

ARTICLE 37

States Parties shall ensure that:

(a) No child shall be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Neither capital punishment nor life imprisonment without possibility of release shall be imposed for offenses committed by persons below eighteen years of age;

(b) No child shall be deprived of his or her liberty unlawfully or arbitrarily. The arrest, detention or imprisonment of a child shall be in conformity with the law and shall be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time;

(c) Every child deprived of liberty shall be treated with humanity and respect for the inherent dignity of the human person, and in a manner which takes into account the needs of persons of his or her age. In particular, every child deprived of liberty shall be separated from adults unless it is considered in the child's best interest not to do so and shall have the right to maintain contact with his or her family through correspondence and visits, save in exceptional circumstances;

(d) Every child deprived of his or her liberty shall have the right to prompt access to legal and other appropriate assistance, as well as the right to challenge the legality of the deprivation of his or her liberty before a court or other competent, independent and impartial authority, and to a prompt decision on any such action.

ARTICLE 38

1. States Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for rules of international humanitarian law applicable to them in armed conflicts which are relevant to the child.

2. States Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure that persons who have not attained the age of fifteen years do not take a direct part in hostilities.

3. States Parties shall refrain from recruiting any person who has not attained the age of fifteen years into their armed forces. In recruiting among those persons who have attained the age of fifteen years but who have not attained the age of eighteen years, States Parties shall endeavour to give priority to those who are oldest.

4. In accordance with their obligations under international humanitarian law to protect the civilian population in armed conflicts, States Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure protection and care of children who are affected by an armed conflict.

ARTICLE 39

States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to promote physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration of a child victim of: any form of neglect, exploitation, or abuse; torture or any other form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; or armed conflicts. Such recovery and reintegration shall take place in an environment which fosters the health, self-respect and dignity of the child.

ARTICLE 40

1. States Parties recognize the right of every child alleged as, accused of, or recognized as having infringed the penal law to be treated in a manner consistent with the promotion of the child's sense of dignity and worth, which reinforces the child's respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of others and which takes into account the child's age and the desirability of promoting the child's reintegration and the child's assuming a constructive role in society.

2. To this end, and having regard to the relevant provisions of international instruments, States Parties shall, in particular, ensure that:

(a) No child shall be alleged as, be accused of, or recognized as having infringed the penal law by reason of acts or omissions that were not prohibited by national or international law at the time they were committed;

(b) Every child alleged as or accused of having infringed the penal law has at least the following guarantees:

(i) To be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law;

(ii) To be informed promptly and directly of the charges against him or her, and, if appropriate, through his or her parents or legal guardians, and to have legal or other appropriate assistance in the preparation and presentation of his or her defence;

(iii) To have the matter determined without delay by a competent, independent and impartial authority or judicial body in a fair hearing according to law, in the presence of legal or other appropriate assistance and, unless it is considered not to be in the best interest of the child, in particular, taking into account his or her age or situation, his or her parents or legal guardians;

(iv) Not to be compelled to give testimony or to confess guilt; to examine or have examined adverse witnesses and to obtain the participation and examination of witnesses on his or her behalf under conditions of equality;

(v) If considered to have infringed the penal law, to have this decision and any measures imposed in consequence thereof reviewed by a higher competent, independent and impartial authority or judicial body according to law;

(vi) To have the free assistance of an interpreter if the child cannot understand or speak the language used;

(vii) To have his or her privacy fully respected at all stages of the proceedings.

3. States Parties shall seek to promote the establishment of laws, procedures, authorities and institutions specifically applicable to children alleged as, accused of, or recognized as having infringed the penal law, and, in particular:

(a) the establishment of a minimum age below which children shall be presumed not to have the capacity to infringe the penal law;

(b) whenever appropriate and desirable, measures for dealing with such children without resorting to judicial proceedings, providing that human rights and legal safeguards are fully respected.

4. A variety of dispositions, such as care, guidance and supervision orders; counselling; probation; foster care; education and vocational training programmes and other alternatives to institutional care shall be available to ensure that children are dealt with in a manner appropriate to their well-being and proportionate both to their circumstances and the offence.

ARTICLE 41

Nothing in the present Convention shall affect any provisions which are more conducive to the realization of the rights of the child and which may be contained in:

(a) The law of a State Party; or

(b) International law in force for that State.

PART 2

ARTICLE 42

States Parties undertake to make the principles and provisions of the Convention widely known, by appropriate and active means, to adults and children alike.

ARTICLE 43

1. For the purpose of examining the progress made by States Parties in achieving the realization of the obligations undertaken in the present Convention, there shall be established a Committee on the Rights of the Child, which shall carry out the functions hereinafter provided.

2. The Committee shall consist of ten experts of high moral standing and recognized competence in the field covered by this Convention. The members of the Committee shall be elected by States Parties from among their nationals and shall serve in their personal capacity, consideration being given to equitable geographical distribution, as well as to the principal legal systems.

3. The members of the Committee shall be elected by secret ballot from a list of persons nominated by States Parties. Each State Party may nominate one person from among its own nationals.

4. The initial election to the Committee shall be held no later than six months after the date of the entry into force of the present Convention and thereafter every second year. At least four months before the date of each election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a letter to States Parties inviting them to submit their nominations within two months. The Secretary-General shall subsequently prepare a list in alphabetical order of all persons thus nominated, indicating States Parties which have nominated them, and shall submit it to the States Parties to the present Convention.

5. The elections shall be held at meetings of States Parties convened by the Secretary-General at United Nations Headquarters. At those meetings, for which two thirds of States Parties shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Committee shall be those who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of States Parties present and voting.

6. The members of the Committee shall be elected for a term of four years. They shall be eligible for re-election if renominated. The term of five of the members elected at the first election shall expire at the end of two years; immediately after the first election, the names of these five members shall be chosen by lot by the Chairman of the meeting.

7. If a member of the Committee dies or resigns or declares that for any other cause he or she can no longer perform the duties of the Committee, the State Party which nominated the member shall appoint another expert from among its nationals to serve for the remainder of the term, subject to the approval of the Committee.

8. The Committee shall establish its own rules of procedure.

9. The Committee shall elect its officers for a period of two years.

10. The meetings of the Committee shall normally be held at United Nations Headquarters or at any other convenient place as determined by the Committee. The Committee shall normally meet annually. The duration of the meetings of the Committee shall be determined, and reviewed, if necessary, by a meeting of the States Parties to the present Convention, subject to the approval of the General Assembly.

11. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee under the present Convention.

12. With the approval of the General Assembly, the members of the Committee established under the present Convention shall receive emoluments from the United Nations resources on such terms and conditions as the Assembly may decide.

ARTICLE 44

1. States Parties undertake to submit to the Committee, through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, reports on the measures they have adopted which give effect to the rights recognized herein and on the progress made on the enjoyment of those rights:

(a) Within two years of the entry into force of the Convention for the State Party concerned;

(b) Thereafter every five years.

2. Reports made under the present article shall indicate factors and difficulties, if any, affecting the degree of fulfilment of the obligations under the present Convention. Reports shall also contain sufficient information to provide the Committee with a comprehensive understanding of the implementation of the Convention in the country concerned.

3. A State Party which has submitted a comprehensive initial report to the Committee need not, in its subsequent reports submitted in accordance with paragraph 1(b) of the present article, repeat basic information previously provided.

4. The Committee may request from States Parties further information relevant to the implementation of the Convention.

5. The Committee shall submit to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, every two years, reports on its activities.

6. States Parties shall make their reports widely available to the public in their own countries.

ARTICLE 45

In order to foster the effective implementation of the Convention and to encourage international co-operation in the field covered by the Convention:

(a) The specialized agencies, the United Nations Children's Fund, and other United Nations organs shall be entitled to be represented at the consideration of the implementation of such provisions of the present Convention as fall within the scope of their mandate. The Committee may invite the specialized agencies, the United Nations Children's Fund and other competent bodies as it may consider appropriate to provide expert advice on the implementation of the Convention in areas falling within the scope of their respective mandates. The Committee may invite the specialized agencies, the United Nations Children's Fund, and other United Nations organs to submit reports on the implementation of the Convention in areas falling within the scope of their activities;

(b) The Committee shall transmit, as it may consider appropriate, to the specialized agencies, the United Nations Children's Fund and other competent bodies, any reports from States Parties that contain a request, or indicate a need, for technical advice or assistance, along with the Committee's observations and suggestions, if any, on these requests or indications;

(c) The Committee may recommend to the General Assembly to request the Secretary-General to undertake on its behalf studies on specific issues relating to the rights of the child;

(d) The Committee may make suggestions and general recommendations based on information received pursuant to articles 44 and 45 of the present Convention. Such suggestions and general recommendations shall be transmitted to any State Party concerned and reported to the General Assembly, together with comments, if any, from States Parties.

PART 3

ARTICLE 46

The present Convention shall be open for signature by all States.

ARTICLE 47

The present Convention is subject to ratification. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 48

The present Convention shall remain open for accession by any State. The instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 49

1. The present Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession.

2. For each State ratifying or acceding to the Convention after the deposit of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the deposit by such State of its instrument of ratification or accession.

ARTICLE 50

1. Any State Party may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to States Parties, with a request that they indicate whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposals. In the event that, within four months from the date of such communication, at least one third of the States Parties favour such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted to the General Assembly for approval.

2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article shall enter into force when it has been approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations and accepted by a two-thirds majority of States Parties.

3. When an amendment enters into force, it shall be binding on those States Parties which have accepted it, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Convention and any earlier amendments which they have accepted.

ARTICLE 51

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall receive and circulate to all States the text of reservations made by States at the time of ratification or accession.

2. A reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the present Convention shall not be permitted.

3. Reservations may be withdrawn at any time by notification to that effect addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall then inform all States. Such notification shall take effect on the date on which it is received by the Secretary-General.

ARTICLE 52

A State Party may denounce the present Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation becomes effective one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

ARTICLE 53

The Secretary-General of the United Nations is designated as the depositary of the present Convention.

ARTICLE 54

The original of the present Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

In witness thereof the undersigned plenipotentiaries, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Convention.

(Adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 20 November 1989)

STATE OF THE WORLD'S CHILDREN 1996

The 1980s: Campaign for Child Survival

As the 1980s - the third Development Decade - dawned, the countries of the developing world were beginning to feel the chill of global recession, with serious repercussions for their poorest people. For the children's cause, however, there were at least some signs of hope, and the success of IYC suggested that the time was right for a further initiative.

In December 1982, in The State of the World's Children report, UNICEF's Executive Director, James P. Grant, launched an initiative known as the "child survival revolution", later to include child development. This campaign reversed conventional wisdom. Rates of infant and young child mortality had previously been seen as a measure of a country's development. Now UNICEF suggested a direct attack on infant and child mortality as an instrument of development.

In a throw-back to the great disease campaigns of the 1950s, UNICEF proposed to vanquish common infections of early childhood using simple medical technologies. From the primary health care package, it singled out four techniques, which collectively were referred to as "GOBI": "G" for growth monitoring to keep a regular check on child wellbeing; "O" for oral rehydration therapy to treat bouts of childhood diarrhoea; "B" for breastfeeding as the perfect nutritional start in life; and "I" for immunization against the six vaccine-preventable childhood killers: tuberculosis, diphtheria, whooping cough, tetanus, polio and measles. One of the strengths of GOBI was that all the techniques were low cost.

The campaign found an extraordinary degree of worldwide resonance. This accumulation of popular and political support was not accidental. During the 1980s, UNICEF developed and fine-tuned a strategy of "social mobilization", enlisting support from every nook and cranny of society - from religious leader to Goodwill Ambassadors, from sports personalities to parliamentarians - to joint the child survival movement and spread its message.

Of the four "GOBI" elements, the expanded programme on immunization was taken up with the greatest enthusiasm in the largest number of countries. And in November 1985, at a ceremony to commemorate the UN's 40th anniversary, nations recommitted themselves to the target originally set in 1977 - universal child immunization by 1990. A goal that a few years before had seemed completely unattainable was now within striking distance. During the 1980s, nutritional status improved in every region, and extraordinary progress was made in access to safe drinking water. By the end of the decade, the "child survival and development revolution" was estimated to have saved the lives of 12 million children.

This also had the effect of pushing the children's health cause up the national and international agenda. But support for human-created development was also coming from a number of other directions. And the activities of women were also changing many development perspectives: since the Women's Conference in Mexico City in 1975, women had been increasingly successful in getting their voices heard.

At the same time, there was mounting pressure for the rights of children - and for the needs of children who were under particular stress - including the disabled; those living and working on city streets; victims of mass violence and warfare; and children suffering from exploitation - as workers and labourers, or as objects of commercial sexual gratification. In the mid-1980s, UNICEF coined a new term to cover all these categories of childhood disadvantage - children in especially difficult circumstances (CEDC).

While UNICEF was analysing CEDC situations and evolving policy responses, the international children's NGOs were more concerned with advocacy and legislation. In 1987, UNICEF too put energy into child rights legislation. Although its support arrived relatively late, UNICEF's capacity for international mobilization was decisive. In 1989, the United Nations General Assembly adopted the Convention on the rights of the Child. On 2 September 1990, the Convention entered into force as international law. Within a year, more than 90 countries had ratified and by end-September 1995, the total was 179. No human rights convention has ever attained such widespread ratification, nor so quickly.

Almost simultaneously, the campaign for child survival and development reached a peak when on 30 September 1990, 71 Heads of State and government took their seats at a World Summit for Children and signed a World Declaration. This contained a 10-point Plan of Action with child-related human development goals for the year 2000. These included reductions in infant and maternal mortality, child malnutrition and illiteracy, as well as targeted levels of access to basic services for health and family planning, education, water and sanitation.

AGENDA 21
CHILDREN AND YOUTH IN SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT

CHAPTER 25

INTRODUCTION

25.1. Youth comprise nearly 30 per cent of the world's population. The involvement of today's youth in environment and development decision-making and in the implementation of programmes is critical to the long-term success of Agenda 21.

PROGRAMME AREAS

Advancing the role of youth and actively involving them in the protection of the environment and the promotion of economic and social development.

BASIS FOR ACTION

25.2. It is imperative that youth from all parts of the world participate actively in all relevant levels of decision-making processes because it affects their lives today and has implications for their futures. In addition to their intellectual contribution and their ability to mobilize support, they bring unique perspectives that need to be taken into account.

25.3. Numerous actions and recommendations within the international community have been proposed to ensure that youth are provided a secure and healthy future, including an environment of quality, improved standards of living and access to eduction and employment. These issues need to be addressed in development planning.

OBJECTIVES

25.4. Each country should, in consultation with its youth communities, establish a process to promote dialogue between the youth community and Government at all levels and to establish mechanisms that permit youth access to information and provide them with the opportunity to present their perspectives on government decision, including the implementation of Agenda 21.

25.5. Each country, by the year 2000, should ensure that more than 50% of its youth, gender balanced, are enrolled in or have access to appropriate secondary education or equivalent educational or vocational training programmes by increasing participation and access rates on an annual basis.

25.6. Each country should undertake initiatives aimed at reducing current levels of youth unemployment, particularly where they are disproportionately high in comparison to overall unemployment rate.

25.7 Each country and the United Nations should support the promotion and creation of mechanisms to involve youth representation in all United Nations processes in order to influence those processes.

25.8. Each country should combat human rights abuses against young people, particularly young women and girls, and should consider providing all youth with legal protection, skills, opportunities and the support necessary for them to fulfil their personal, economic and social aspirations and potentials.

ACTIVITIES

25.9 Governments, according to their strategies, should take measures to:

(a) Establish procedures allowing for consultation and possible participation of youth of both genders by 1993 in decision-making processes with regard to the environment, involving youth at the local, national and regional levels;

(b) Promote dialogue with youth organizations regarding the drafting and evaluation of environment plans and programmes or questions on development;

(c) Consider for incorporation into relevant policies the recommendations of international, regional and local youth conferences and other forums that offer youth perspectives on social and economic development and resource management;

(d) Ensure access for all youth to all types of education, wherever appropriate, providing alternative learning structures, ensure that education reflects the economic and social needs of youth and incorporates the concepts of environmental awareness and sustainable development throughout the curricula; and expand vocational training, implementing innovative methods aimed at increasing practical skills, such as environmental scouting;

(e) In cooperation with relevant ministries and organizations, including representatives of youth, develop and implement strategies for creating alternative employment opportunities and provide required training to young men and women;

(f) Establish task forces that include youth and youth non-governmental organizations to develop educational and awareness programmes specifically targeted to the youth population on critical issues pertaining to youth. These task forces should use formal and non-formal educational methods to reach a maximum audience. National and local media, non-governmental organizations, business and other organizations should assist in these task forces;

(g) Give support to programmes projects, networks, national organizations and youth non-governmental organizations to examine the integration of programmes in relation to their projects requirements, encouraging the involvement of youth in project identification, design, implementation and follow-up;

(h) Include youth representatives in their delegations to international meetings, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions adopted in 1968, 1977, 1985 and 1989.

25.10.The United Nations and international organizations with youth programmes should take measure to:

(a) Review their youth programmes and consider how coordination between them can be enhanced;

(b) Improve the dissemination of relevant information to governments, youth organisations and other non-governmental organisations on current youth positions and activities and, monitor and evaluate the application of Agenda 21;

(c) Promote the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Youth Year and collaborate with youth representatives in the administration of it, focusing particularly on the needs of youth from developing countries.

MEANS OF IMPLEMENTATION

FINANCING AND COST EVALUATION

25.11. The conference secretariat has estimated the average age total annual cost (1993 - 2000) of implementing the activities of this programme to be about $1,5 million on grant or concessional terms. These are indicative and order-of-magnitud estimates only and have not been reviewed by Governments. Actual costs and financial terms, including any that are non-concessional, will depend upon, inter alia, the specific strategies and programmes Governments decide upon for implementation.

CHILDREN IN SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT

BASIS FOR ACTION

25.12. Children not only will inherit the responsibility of looking after the Earth, but in many developing countries they comprise nearly half the population. Furthermore, children in both developing and industrialized countries are highly vulnerable to the effects of environmental degradation. They are also highly aware supporters of environmental thinking. The specific interests of children need to be taken fully into account in the participatory process on environment and development in order to safeguard the future sustainability of any actions taken to improve the environment.

OBJECTIVES

25.13. National governments, according to their policies, should take measure to:

(a) Ensure the survival, protection and development of children, in accordance with the goals endorsed by the 1990 World Summit for Children (A/45/625, annex);

(b) Ensure that the interests of children are taken fully into account in the participatory process for sustainable development and environmental improvement.

ACTIVITIES

25.14. Governments should take active steps to:

(a) Implement programmes for children designed to reach the child-related goals of the 1990s in the areas of environment development, especially health, nutrition, education, literacy and poverty alleviation;

(b) Ratify the Convention on the Rights of the Child (general Assembly resolution 44/25 of 20 November 1989, annex), at the earliest moment and implement it by addressing the basic needs of youth and children;

(c) Promote primary environmental care activities that address the basic needs of communities, improve the environment for children at the household and community level and encourage the participation and empowerment of local populations, including women, youth, children and indigenous people, towards the objective of integrated community management of resources, especially in developing countries;

(d) Expand educational opportunities for children and youth, including education for environmental and developmental responsibility, with overriding attention to the education of the girl child;

(e) Mobilize communities through schools and local health centres so that children and their parents become effective focal points for sensitization of communities to environmental issue;

(f) Establish procedures to incorporate children's concerns into all relevant policies and strategies for environment and development at the local, regional and national levels, including those concerning allocation of and entitlement to natural resources, housing and recreation needs, and control of pollution and toxicity in both rural and urban areas.

25.15. International and regional organizations should cooperate and coordinate in the proposed areas. UNICEF should maintain cooperation and collaboration with other organizations of the United Nations, Governments and non-governmental organizations to develop programmes for children and programmes to mobilize children in the activities outlined above.

MEANS OF IMPLEMENTATION

FINANCING AND COST EVALUATION

25.16. Financing requirements for most of the activities are included in estimates for other programmes.

HUMAN RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT AND CAPACITY-BUILDING

25.17. The activities should facilitate capacity-building and training activities already contained in other chapters of Agenda 21.

THE CHILDREN'S CHARTER OF ·SOUTH AFRICA·

PREAMBLE

We, the delegates of the International Children's Summit held from 27 May to 1 June 1992, acting as representatives from the regions of Western Cape, Eastern Cape, Southern Cape, Northern Cape, Boland, Border, Midlands, Southern Natal, Northern Natal, Namaqualand, PWV, Eastern Transvaal, Western Transvaal, Northern Transvaal, Northern Orange Free State, Southern Orange Free State, Transkei, and on behalf of the children of South Africa,

Realising that all children are created equal and are entitled to basic human rights and freedoms and that all children deserve respect and special care and protection as they develop and grow and

Recognising that within South Africa, children have not been treated with respect and dignity, but as a direct result of apartheid have been subjected to discrimination, violence and racism that has destroyed families and communities and has disrupted education and social relationships and

Acknowledging that at the present time, children have not been placed on the agenda of any political party, or the existing government or within the CODESA negotiations and are not given the attention that they deserve

Taking into consideration the cultural values, languages and traditions of all children and,

Recognising the urgent need for attention to improving the life of children and protecting their rights in every region, in particular those regions which have been especially subjected to violence, political unrest and poverty,

Have agreed upon the following:

PART 1

ARTICLE 1

For the purpose of the charter, a child means any person under the age of 18 years unless otherwise stated

ARTICLE 2

Children have been and continue to be abused, tortured, mistreated, neglected and abandoned by the people of South Africa. Children are not treated with the respect and dignity that every human being deserves, but are subjected to violence, poverty, racism and the ignorance of adults. Children continue to suffer from the inequalities of apartheid, especially in the area of education. Children do not receive proper health and medical care and attention, yet do not have the right to demand treatment. Children are arrested, tried without lawyers and held in prison. Children are beaten and abused by the police and by gangs and other adults. Children are the leaders of tomorrow, but they are not given the right to participate in consultations or negotiations about their future. The government and other political parties have put children last, not first.

We therefore set forth that all children of South Africa are entitled to the following rights and protections:

PART 2

1. All children have the right to protection and guarantees of all the rights of the Charter and should not be discriminated against because of their parents or families' colour, race, gender, language, religion, personal or political opinion, nationality, disability or for any other reason

2. All political parties, the government, CODESA, the future government, communities, families and parents should do everything possible to ensure that children are not discriminated against because of parents' or families' colour, race, gender, language, religion, personal or political opinion, nationality, disability or for any other reason

ARTICLE 2

All children have the right to a name and nationality as soon as they are born.

ARTICLE 3

1. All children have the right to express their own opinions and the right to be heard in all matters that affect their rights, protection and welfare

2. All children have the right to be heard in courtrooms and hearings which affect their future rights and protection and welfare and to be treated with the special care and consideration within those courtrooms and hearings which their age and maturity demands

3. All children have the right to free legal representation if arrested

4. All children have the right to participate in the government of the country and special attention should be given to consultations with children on their rights and situations

ARTICLE 4

All children have the right to freedom to practise their own religion, culture or beliefs without fear

ARTICLE 5

VIOLENCE

1. All children have the right to be protected from all types of violence including: physical, emotional, verbal, psychological, sexual, state, political, gang, domestic, school, township and community, street, racial, self-destructive and all other forms of violence

429

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

2. All children have the right to freedom from corporal punishment at school, from the police and in prisons and at home.

3. All children have the right to be protected from neglect and abandonment.

4. All children have the right to be protected from township and political violence and to have safe places and community centres where they can go for help and security from violence.

5. All children have the right to be educated about child abuse and the right to form youth groups to protect them from abuse.

6. All persons have a duty to report all violence against, abuse of and neglect of any child to the appropriate authorities.

7. Children should not be used as shields or tools by the perpetrators of violence.

8. Children have the right to say no to violence.

9. The media has a duty to prevent the exploitation of children who are victims of violence and should be prohibited from the promotion of violence.

10. All children have the right to be protected from violence by the police and in prisons.

11. Children should not be obliged or forced to follow adults in their political involvements.

12. All children have the right to be free from torture, detention or any other physical or emotional violence during apartheid or at times of unrest or war.

13. All children have the right to be protected from drug and alcohol abuse by parents, families and others and to be educated about these forms of violence.

14. Children have the right to special children's courts and medical facilities to protect them from violence.

15. Special groups and organisations should be formed within communities to protect and counsel victims of all types of violence.

16. No child should be held in prison or police cells at any time.

ARTICLE 6

FAMILY LIFE

1. All children have the right to a safe, secure and nurturing family and the right to participate as a member of that family.

2. All children have the right to love and affection from their parents and family.

3. All children have the right to clothing, housing and a healthy diet.

4. All children have the right to clean water, sanitation and a clean living environment.

5. All children have the right to be protected from domestic violence.

6. All children who do not have a family should be provided with a safe and secure place to live and clothing and nutritious food within the community where they live.

7. Special protections should be given to children who are orphaned or abandoned as a result of violence or any other reason or are refugees or returning from exile and every effort should be made to place them within a safe and secure 'family'.

ARTICLE 7

HEALTH AND WELFARE

1. All children have the right to adequate health care and medical attention both before and after birth.

2. All children have the right to be protected from harmful and toxic substances such as cigarettes, drugs and alcohol and to be educated about the effects on their health and environment.

3. All children have the right to free and comprehensive health services, especially in schools, including screening of diseases, treatment of diseases and physical and psychological treatment and services.

4. All children have the right to demand health and medical care without the permission of their parents or guardians.

5. All children have the right to be protected and educated about Aids and to be given adequate health care and protection. Any child whose family is infected with Aids should be given special care and protection.

6. Disabled children have the right to special health care and protection.

ARTICLE 8

EDUCATION

1. All children have the right to free and equal, non-racial, non-sexist and compulsory education within one department as education is a right not a privilege.

2. All children have a right to education which is in the interest of the child and to develop their talents through education, both formal and informal.

3. All teachers should be qualified and should treat children with patience, respect and dignity. All teachers should be evaluated and monitored to ensure that they are protecting the rights of the child.

4. Parents have a duty to become involved in their children's education and development and to participate in their children's education at school and at home.

5. All children have the right to play and to free and adequate sports and recreational facilities so that children can be children.

6. All children have the right to participate in the evaluation and upgrading of curriculum so that it respects all the traditions, cultures and values of children in South Africa.

7. All children have the right to education on issues such as sexuality, AIDS, human rights, history and background of South Africa and family life.

8. All children have the right to adequate educational facilities and transportation to such facilities should be provided to children in difficult or violent situations.

ARTICLE 9

CHILD LABOUR

1. All children have the right to be protected from child labour and any other economic exploitation which endangers their mental, physical or psychological health and interferes with their education so that they can develop properly and enjoy childhood.

2. All children, especially in rural areas, should be protected from hard labour including farm, domestic or manual labour or any other type of labour.

3. All children have the right to be protected from prostitution and sexual exploitation such as pornography.

4. There should be a minimum age of employment and no child should be forced to leave school before the completion of matric for the purpose of employment.

5. There should be regulations and restrictions on the hours and types of work and penalties for those who violate these regulations.

6. All children have the right to be protected from child slavery and from the inheritance of labour or employment from their parents or families.

ARTICLE 10

HOMELESS CHILDREN

1. No child should be forced to live on the streets.

2. Homeless children have the right to be protected from harassment and abuse from police, security guards and all other persons and every person has a duty to report any abuse or violence against children.

3. Homeless children have the right to a decent place to live, clothing and a healthy diet.

4. Street children have the right to a decent place to live, clothing and a healthy diet.

5. Communities and families have a duty to protect their children from becoming homeless and abandoned.

6. All persons should be made aware of the plight of homeless children and should participate in programmes which act to positively eradicate the problem of homeless children.

7. The government has a duty and responsibility for homeless children.

RESOLUTIONS

We, the children of South Africa, therefore demand that:

1. The existing government, the African National Congress, the Pan Africanist Congress, Inkatha Freedom Party, CODESA, the National Party, the Democratic Party and all other parties at present involved in negotiations acknowledge, adopt and support the Children's Charter via the establishment of committees, working groups and commissions that will ensure that children's rights will no longer be ignored in South Africa and that children will be placed first on the agenda, not last. Also, that these groups act to support existing children's structures and organisations.

2. A children's representative or council of representatives should be placed on CODESA, and within the existing and future governments. Children have the right to participate in and be consulted about government.

3. The future constitution and bill of rights include special provisions for children's care and protection and development.

4. The National Children's Rights Committee and all other children's structures and organisations, both domestic and international, acknowledge, accept and support the Children's Charter in as many ways as possible.

5. Communities and regions act to acknowledge, adopt and support the Children's Charter and ensure that the needs of their children are addressed with urgency.

6. The delegates of the Summit act to ensure that their regions, communities, schools, families, adults and peers are informed about the Children's Charter and that there is continuing evaluation about the way forward to a culture of children's rights.

Children will no longer remain silent about their rights, but will speak and even shout out about their needs and demands.

(Adopted at the International Summit on the Rights of Children in Somerset West on 1 June 1992)

"Hazardous child labour is a betrayal of every child's rights as a human being and is an offence against our civilization."

·CHILDREN'S TELEVISION CHARTER·

1. Children should have programmes of high quality which are made specifically for them, and which do not exploit them. These programmes, in addition to entertaining, should allow children to develop physically, mentally and socially to their fullest potential.

2. Children should hear, see and express themselves, their culture, their languages and their life experiences, through television programmes which affirm their sense of self, community and place.

3. Children's programmes should promote an awareness and appreciation of other cultures in parallel with the child's own cultural background.

4. Children's programmes should be wide ranging in general and content, but should not include gratuitous scenes of violence and sex.

5. Children's programmes should be aired in regular slots at times when children are available to view, and/or distributed via other widely accessible media or technologies.

6. Sufficient funds must be made available to make these programmes to the highest possible standards.

7. Governments, production, distribution and funding organisations should recognise both the importance and vulnerability of indigenous children's television and take steps to support and protect it.

(Internationally accepted and adopted on 29 May 1995 in Munich)

·SADC CHILDREN'S BROADCASTING CHARTER·

We, the people of the Southern African Development Communities; Angola, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Mauritius, Mozambique and Namibia, affirm and accept the internationally adopted Children's Television Charter which was accepted in Munich on 29 May 1995.

Without detracting from the International Children's Charter, we further adopt in line with the said charter and in the spirit of the said Charter our SADC Children's Broadcasting Charter, which takes into consideration the needs and wants of children in our region.

1. Children should have programmes of high quality, made specifically for them and which do not exploit them. These programmes in addition to entertaining should allow children to develop physically, mentally and socially to their fullest potential.

2. Whilst endorsing the child's right to freedom of expression, thought, conscience and religion, and protection against economic exploitation of children must be ensured access to programmes and production of programmes through multi-media access centres.

3. Children should hear, see and express themselves, their culture, their language and their life experiences, through the electronic media which affirm their sense of self, community and place.

4. As part of the child's right to education and development, children's programmes should promote an awareness and appreciation of other cultures in parallel with the child's own cultural background and to facilitate this there should be an ongoing research into the child audience, including the child's needs and wants which as a matter of priority should be implemented.

5. Children's programmes should be wide ranging in general and content but should not include gratuitous scenes of violence and sex.

6. Children's programmes should be aired in regular slots at times when children are available to listen and view; and/or distributed via other widely accessible media or technologies.

7. Sufficient resources, technical, financial and other must be made available to make these programmes of highest possible standards and in order to achieve quality, setting codes and standards for children's broadcasting must be formulated and developed through a diverse range of groupings.

8. In compliance with the United Nations policy of co-operation between states in the international community and especially in the SADC countries, the Children's Broadcasting Charter recognises all international covenants, conventions, treaties, charters and agreements adopted by all international organisations including the United Nations and the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) affecting children, but with particular reference to the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.

DEPARTMENT OF WELFARE

In the past few years, the Youth Section of the Chief Directorate: Population Development of the Department of Welfare did a considerable amount of work with the youth of South Africa, both at the national and regional levels. The objective was to achieve youth involvement in population and development issues. At the national level, a pilot project of the strategy for involving youth in population and development was done through the running of several youth workshops, as well as national youth conferences in 1994 and 1995. Similar workshops were also conducted by some regional personnel.

These undertakings were informative about how highly organised the youth of South Africa are. At community level, there are political, religious, cultural, and service youth organisations. Service youth organisations cover issues like AIDS education, education on drug abuse, education of sexuality and the prevention of unplanned pregnancies, education on population and environmental issues, as well as many other issues which capture the concern of youth groups. These formations were noted to be characteristic of formal learning institutions also, both a the secondary and tertiary levels of education. There is a wealth of youthful enthusiasm for getting South African life better for the citizens of this country.

The question which confronted the Youth Section was how to get all these youth initiatives co-ordinated, recognised, supported by funders and professionals. It was noted that each event organised for youth was followed by complaints from organisations which were left out because youth workers were not aware of their existence! This indicated that there were many development initiatives undertaken by youth, which call for professional guidance and inputs and other forms of support.

The answer to this problem was considered to a well researched directory of youth organisations, which can be consulted when organising youth events whether at the national, provincial, or local level. Such a directory would also enhance networking among youth formations with similar objectives.

The idea of a youth directory came up strongly in the 1994 national youth conference, and was endorsed by different organisations involved with youth at the time, such as the Southern African Association of Youth Clubs, the Departments of Education and Environmental Affairs, and indeed, by the youth organisations too. The youth section of the Chief Directorate of Population Development was mandated to follow up on this proposition.

Many changes in recent months have caught up with the process of the compilation of the directory. It is trusted that The Youth Book: A Directory of Southern African Youth Organisations, Service Providers and Resource Material will be invaluable to the emerging institutional framework for the involvement of youth in development issues.

Nelson Mandela
CHILDREN'S FUND

· NELSON MANDELA · CHILDREN'S FUND (NMCF)

Nelson Mandela
CHILDREN'S FUND

The genesis of the Nelson Mandela Children's Fund (NMCF) was a unique event when one man, President Nelson Mandela, pledged one third of his salary for five years to found and perpetuate the Fund.

The NMCF provides a way through which people from all walks of life can make their own direct contribution to alleviate the plight of our youth in dire need, and prepare them for a brighter tomorrow.

The purpose of the NMCF is to help inspire new efforts and strengthen existing ones aimed at repairing the ravaged fabric of our youth's social and economic circumstances. We aspire to play a key role as a catalyst for changing the way children are treated, as well as directly promoting the success of projects bringing immediate relief.

When we consider that 37% of our country's population is under the age of 15, and a further 11 million or 24% are in the 16 to 30 year age group, of which 52% are unemployed, it becomes clear that no single institution, including government is capable of meeting the enormous needs of the under-resourced section of South Africa's youth.

Consequently, networking by all role-players in each focused area of need, is essential for productive success as it allows many to join hands and maximise solutions and effective replication, without stultifying innovation and individuality.

While the NMCF does initiate and develop projects and provide clothing, provisions, shelter, physical aids, training and equipment, it always works in close alliance with existing and new non-government and community-based organisations to achieve our primary mission.

There are many ordinary people doing extraordinary things to repair the ravaged fabric of our youth's social and economic circumstances. These are the 'key achievers' - people who have the ability to transform ideas into tangible reality 'on the ground', often against all the odds. These are the 'key achievers' - people who have the ability to transform ideas into tangible reality 'on the ground', often against all the odds. These are the people we support.

The key criteria for our involvement in youth initiatives are that projects must represent and incorporate the following:

- Supported and endorsed by community participation and involvement;
- Aligned to a work and learning ethic;
- Promote self-reliance; and
- Lead to lasting improvement in the lives of the participants.

The focus of the NMCF is on the following young people:

- Homeless, abused and abandoned;
- Without adequate education because of poor past schooling;
- Disabled;
- Young offenders in prison and places of safety, requiring life skills, education and training aligned to the world of work; and
- In need of places to play in safety.

As at 31 March 1996 the NMCF has allocated R9,018 million in 523 separate grants to 301 grantees throughout the country.

Together we are creating a brighter tomorrow and are strengthening the foundations of a peaceful and prosperous, inclusive society in this wonderful land of ours.

The reward is measured in the happiness and welfare of our children, at once the most vulnerable citizens in any society and the greatest of our treasures.

UNFPA

UNFPA

· UNITED NATIONS · POPULATION FUND (UNFPA)

The UNFPA is the largest source of multilateral assistance to governments for population activities. It has been operating in South Africa since November 1994.

Following the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD), UNFPA revamped its mandate to concentrate on three new programme areas, namely reproductive health including family planning and sexual health, population and development strategies and advocacy.

With regard to reproductive health, UNFPA is providing support to the Women's Health Project and the Departments of Health in the North-West Province and the Northern Cape to restructure and strengthen the reproductive health and family planning programmes in the two provinces and to transform the existing service delivery system through enhancing the capacities of service providers.

Support is provided to Planned Parenthood Association of South Africa (PPASA) to conduct three projects to improve reproductive health. The Adolescent Reproductive Health Services Programme provides information, counselling and services (specifically STD treatment and contraception) in an effort to improve the reproductive health of adolescents. The Sexuality Education Programme for Schools involves training teachers, developing teachers resource packs, establishing a support network for teachers, developing a curriculum for a parents programme and continuous evaluation of the progress of the project. The Community Based Distribution of Contraceptives project aims to increase, supplement and complement the services offered at clinics by providing a community based contraceptive education and service point.

UNFPA supports two projects with the Reproductive Health Research Unit. The Expanding Contraceptive Choice project supports the introduction or reintroduction of barrier methods, emergency contraception and female sterilisation in three provinces. This project will increase accessibility to reproductive health services and expand individuals' range or choice to safe, effective and low cost contraceptions. The Reproductive Health Education Programme seeks to improve the reproductive health skills and knowledge of primary health practitioners at the district level. The project provides for three modules which will take working nurses or doctors one year to complete. These modules are contraception and sexuality, STDs and HIV/AIDS and gynaecology.

UNFPA funds the services of three short-term consultants within the Department of Health, Directorate for Maternal, Child and Women's Health. The consultants are to assist the Directorate in the formulation of its maternal, reproductive and adolescent health programmes.

With regard to population and development strategies, UNFPA has been assisting the Chief Directorate: Population Development in the Department of Welfare with the formulation of the recently approved population policy for South Africa which takes into consideration the recommendations contained in the ICPD Programme of Action. At the request of the Central Statistical Services (CSS), UNFPA has provided technical assistance for the 1996 national population census.

As far as advocacy is concerned, UNFPA provided assistance to the South African Parliament to host a two-day workshop for South African parliamentarians, both at national and provincial levels, aimed at sensitising them towards population issues. At the end of their deliberations the parliamentarians adopted a Statement of Intent on Population and Development.

UNFPA will in the coming months, together with government, NGOs, civil society and the international donor community fashion out a multi-year programme that will address the rapidly developing needs of South Africa.

As a regional follow-up to the 1994 ICPD, the Department of Welfare, with assistance from the UNFPA, hosted the Southern African Ministers Conference on Population and Development from 28-31 October 1996.

The ministers responsible for the population function in the SADC countries adopted a range of recommendations to foster greater regional cooperation in the field of population and development and to investigate the possibility of formalising population in the Southern African region as part of the SADC structures. The ministers resolved to have a follow-up meeting in either Botswana or Mauritius in the first half of 1997.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, ·SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANISATION· (UNESCO)

Global Youth Development Effort

Perhaps the greatest challenge facing humanity on the eve of the third millennium is replacing the culture of war with the culture of peace. By this is meant the institutionalisation of a living culture, based on the practice of human rights and on the values of justice, solidarity, tolerance and equity, on the promotion of democracy and sustainable human development. Considering the seemingly intractable problems regularly brought to our attention from all corners of the globe, it is understandable that we are a bit sceptical about the prospects of setting the peoples and nations of the world along this peaceful path.

To a large extent our scepticism can be attributed to the fact that our development strategies have for the most part paid insufficient attention to the claims of the youth to the fullest participation in the design and implementation of multi-faceted development strategies.

For generations of leaders, the youth had been invariably seen as a source of labour power - providing energy for national ambitions, whether these related to the production of goods and services or to military conquest. At best, the youth were seen as transmitters of derived wisdom from one generation to the next. The manifestations of their creative energies were invariably interpreted as deviant and their capacity for original thought proscribed at every turn. Little thought was given to their involvement in governance; far less to their recruitment for the task of peace building.

UNESCO, established in the immediate post-World War II period with a mandate to establish the defences of peace in the minds of men through the international action to promote knowledge as well as an appreciation of the dignity and equality of all men, quickly saw the importance of involvement of youth in its international education and other programmes. Thus, during the 1950s the Organisation inaugurated an Associated Youth Enterprises System to promote greater understanding among European youth. One example of this enterprise was the recruitment of youthful demobilised soldiers and displaced youth to assist with the reconstruction effort in various parts of Europe.

By the 1960s the Organisation had reached a high point in terms of its conceptualisation of youth and its role in social engineering. To UNESCO, the youth constituted an unrivalled pool of creative talent, which, with appropriate education and training - including the fostering of a spirit of peace, co-operation, mutual respect and understanding - rendered them a key national and international resource. The youth thus represented a distinct and legitimate entity with entitlement to the full range of rights and privileges enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and other international instruments covering human rights. The rights of youth to the fullest participation in society, including involvement in problem-solving and decision making, the Organisation insisted, could not be determined on the basis of age. This meant that national institutional and policy frameworks should be so ordered as to promote inclusion rather than exclusion and marginalization.

UNESCO employs a comprehensive and integrated strategy to enable the provision of assistance to member states desiring to see the youth as a key resource in preparing for the 21st century. In the first place, due recognition is given to the fact that the first and second levels of education are crucial to laying a solid foundation, not only for maintaining and transmitting core values for social cohesion, but for building further knowledge, building creativity and facilitating contribution and participation in society.

It is accepted, however, that many first and second level systems are ill prepared to provide this necessary background and that assistance must also be provided to enable support to youth through non-formal and open learning structures. UNESCO therefore places great focus on the provision of support for the articulation of youth policies at the national and international levels. In this regard, the INFOYOUTH Network serves as a vehicle for the pooling of resources as well as the means through which experiential and analytical tools are made available to state agencies responsible for the formulation of youth policies. INFOYOUTH, which normally works in close co-operation with UNESCO National Commissions, national and international youth organizations as well as state and non-governmental agencies, including youth research entities, also supports youth development activities and organises reflection and debate on issues relating to the development of policies. One recent international seminar looked at New Approaches, and New Strategies for Information and Research on Youth: the European Example.

As has been hinted above, the situation of a country's youth is a fairly accurate mirror of the success or otherwise of its development policies and hence its preparedness to come to terms with the challenges of the future. For many countries, developed as well as developing, high rates of youth unemployment are a fact of life. Though the Organisation is extremely active in the promotion of networking, research and experimentation meant to facilitate appropriate skills training of unemployed and marginalized youth, other structures have been put in place to empower youth to identify and come to terms with their situation and to transform what is usually a period of despair into a period of opportunity. Two facilities may be referred to here: the Special Fund for Youth (SFY) and the International Fund for the Development of Physical Education and Sports (FIDEPS). The first facility allows the Division of Youth and Sports to collect and redistribute cash and material to special programmes, whereas the latter allows for the provision of support largely for the development of sports and sports facilities in disadvantaged areas.

Support for the development of leisure and sporting activities, particularly among disadvantaged groups, is a key area of endeavour for UNESCO. However, the Organisation is keen to continue its involvement in providing a platform for youth to reflect about the future and their role in shaping that future. During the 1960s, UNESCO provided just such an opportunity to the youth who were anxious to show their opposition, firstly to the Vietnam war and more fundamentally, to the absence of structures and avenues for their expression and participation. So successful were these regional consultations - they are recognised as having been responsible for the creation of the Organisation's Division of Youth - that the modality has been adopted as a permanent feature of the UNESCO's interface with youth.

The current manifestation of this anxiety to consult and to facilitate dialogue and reflection by youth is the Rounding the Cape project. Conceptualised and implemented in partnership with United Nations Organisations, NGOs as well as UNESCO Clubs and UNESCO Associated Schools, the Cape Project is aimed at facilitating on-going dialogue with young people as a means to determining their current and future needs, expectations and aspirations. It is also aimed at identifying solutions to the problems facing today s youth and at providing a framework for facilitating the involvement of young people in development planning. Finally, the project seeks to promote among youth those attitudes, aspirations and forms of expression which promote harmonious living.

Despite the fact that UNESCO has been out of the South African scene for some forty years, the impact of its work was felt by many. During his recent visit to South Africa, Federico Mayor was informed by President Mandela that the UNESCO magazine, The Courier, was one of the publications which he eagerly looked forward to, during his long imprisonment. Additionally, thousands of South Africans, some of them now in leadership positions, were recipients of UNESCO scholarships and study awards, allowing them to pursue tertiary education in African and other universities.

Presently, the groundwork for UNESCO involvement is being laid with an attempt to establish strategic partnerships with government departments, universities, youth associations and non-governmental organisations. Discussions have already been held with several entities, including the National Youth Commission, with a view to their involvement in the design and implementation of capacity building pilot programmes. Included among these is a major youth skills training initiative discussed by the Director-General during his recent visit to South Africa, and which also covers activities in Mozambique and Eritrea. The project is being designed to assist with employment and income generation and the promotion of renewed involvement with the learning world particularly among rural and marginalized youth. More importantly, the project hopes to generate new audio-visual teaching material based on local languages and to develop and test community-based arrangements for the supervision of the teaching learning process in rural areas.

A key goal of our programming in this sector, will be the linking of South African youth NGOs with their international counterparts within the framework of UNESCO's Youth NGO Network. Through this network, and in particular its Africa Regional Consultation, UNESCO hopes to tap into the mobilising ability and communications capacity of NGOs, allowing them, through regular contact with the Youth and Sports Activities Division of the Organisation, to significantly inform the work and policies of the Organisation.

The current partnership with PRODDER signals the desire of UNESCO Pretoria to provide further support for the work of an entity which is already well known with regard to the generation of information for development. Additionally, the goal is to place critical information for and about educational and employment opportunities in the hands of youth and other entities interested in promoting education and training opportunities for South African youth.

It is our hope that this effort will be followed by others meant in the first place to differentiate the medium through which information for and about youth is distributed. More importantly, we hope that the opportunity will be found to allow UNESCO to join other strategic partners in the dynamic and on-going campaign to enable the youth of this vibrant country, not only to fulfil their individual aspirations, but to contribute to the transformation of South African society into one characterised by inclusion, meaningful participation and of course, youthful dynamism.

The objective of this publication is to provide youth, as well as people and organisations involved and interested in youth-related issues, with a comprehensive source of information on South African youth organisations and related relevant issues.

It is hoped that this publication will enhance cooperation and interaction between youth, youth organisations and other service providers to the youth sector.
